Exactly, and a great analogy. Whatever collects and delivers the photons most effectively is what gets the results.

This is why I'm strongly considering changing over from Nikon DSLRs to the Micro 4/3 format.

I can get an adapter that'll let me use all my Alpa lenses including fast 50, 100 and 150mm apochromats on the micro 4/3 camera.

What radio can do that? And what is the master oscillator consist of-does it contain a cesium/rubidium stage?

Will I sell it? Maybe, after Odumbo and Emanuel are tried, convicted, and hung by the neck on the steps of our great Capitol.

My illustrious relative, Abraham Lincoln, whom I'm related to by both blood and marriage would be proud of me.

I keep wondering how you'd measure such a thing. Leave it on for several years to see if the oscillator drifts one hertz?

Not to be too precious, but that does not sound like the best use of one's hobby dollar to me ;-)

It doesn't sound as impressive as it looks. The audio is comparable to Sat 700, which wasn't quite as smooth as Sat 500.

That's interesting - on the R75, which is of course not sidebandselectable, the Kiwa-modified S-AM is tenacious as hell for a weak signal. However, if you drop the RF gain to help out the AGC and improve the S/N ratio, you have to be a bit fussy - too low and the S-AM will occasionally lose the lock. For each signal incoming there is a sweet spot where the S-AM remains locked, the AGC keeps the signal on an even keel, and the S/N ratio is optimized.

I worked with one engineer who built a frequency standard using WWV as a reference. He would hook that up to the air monitor and compare our carrier to the reference when he did a proof.

With a fairly simple scope you could see the smallest differences between the two frequencies. He plotted drift over a month at a time. And could extrapolate out months at a time with surprising precision.

He showed me how it would be a fairly simple implementation to use the WWV derived reference signal to control the local oscillator's stability outright.

When we went to AM stereo, we had a serious issue with platform motion near the nulls of our 6 tower array. He synced to WWV to reduce that locally, and did a presentation to the state broadcasters association describing how platform motion could be eliminated entirely by syncing to WWV as a standard across the implementation.

It's not difficult to do. Requires little expense, and can be applied to every receiver in one's stable.

It's possible for Bob's receivers to be as stable as WWV by simply using WWV as a controlling reference.

Some of us travel heavy. I wind up schlepping my tripod and 20 lbs.
of camera into the mountains more often than I care to admit (or contemplate). OTOH, bigger isn't always better when it comes to glass
- although it can help.

Could be. You guys get a decidely different weather regime than we get here near SF...it seems to be more related to something chaotic and not present here; our weather is boring and highly predictable, yours is more interesting and difficult to gauge. I don't know - might be the ocean currents (I think we get a stronger and more persistent upwelled cold water influence here) or maybe SoCal climate is more heavily affected by the polar/subtropical boundary (frontal zone) or maybe a degree of continentality brought on by the desert.
This is all sheer guesswork - but I agree, it's different down thar.

You can always find obstacles, if you look hard enough.

If you know what you're doing, whether capturing photons in the environs, or sucking electrons out of the ether, you don't miss anything. No matter what you're carrying.

I don't even carry a camera bag.

By way of comparison, I have to travel light. There simply isn't room in the aircraft for what I can't hold in my hands. So, a premium lens is essential. And the right selection of premium glass is required. For most shooting, two bodies, two lenses. 24-70mm f2.8 on D700, and 70-200mm f2.8 on D300. Covers any territory I may encounter.

If you have a computer you could try a Ten Tec RX-320D black box receiver which has the 12kHz connector built in. I just gave one away to a friend. Mine was the older RX-320 which was easily modified for DRM. Before I gave it to him I tried some DRM reception and it worked well decoding China Radio relayed from Sackville (Canada) on 6080.
BUT.....

There are not too many DRM broadcasts out there. I tend to agree that it is a mode that may not be around too long. But on the bright side if you have a computer hooked to a radio you can decode lots of other stuff. Digital and analog SSTV and PSK31 to name a few.

You really are a Republican't!

You follow up a request for "equivalent" documentation and you come up with "literal" responses.

FYI, Bush was governor of Texas while I was living there (didn't vote for him as I preferred an intelligent governor) and he totally destroyed Texas' education system during his tenure, same as he did for the good ol' U.S. of A. during THAT tenure (which is a big reason I didn't vote for him for President being afraid he would do to our nation's youth what he did to the youth of Texas). Got any GOOD records from his governorship ("equivalent" to Obama's senatorial elective office). And don't give me the crap about state governor not being equivalent to a state senator. Both are elected offices and their records for either are entirely relevant to their "application" for the presidency.

Go get off your right-wing BS and give me equivalents, not irrelevant BS or FOAD (as you like to say).

I really like satellite radio. I've had it in a couple of rental cars, and it's da bomb. Gets a little goofy under heavy tree cover, but the selection of quality music (classical, jazz) is wonderful. A great replacement for general-listening FM broadcast.

I have a Lot of very old film cameras.A foot locker full of them and another foot locker about half way full of them.Also, I have some very old movie cameras and some old camera lenses and other camera related thingys, some old tripods too.I bought them many years ago at thrift stores and junk shops, bought them when the prices was Good.I am and always have been a junk collector, all kinds of junk, radios too, but it isn't all junk.Some old cameras are very collectible, check out the Browns catalog about old collectible cameras.

I almost never take any pictures, but when I do, I use my Kodak FX 600 film camera.It works just fine for me.

Wouldn't have done much good since I quit high school. Still, I'm pretty sure if you asked anyone at the schools I attended if they recall Swiggy, they most likely will.

As for his college transcripts, I'm fairly certain that the college where he was a law professor required those. Still, the office of the president of the US is not required to have any formal education, although it doesn't hurt. I did notice that when Snopes posted the blow-off of the GOP lie machine's comments about his college transcripts and the like, one of the documents they produced was a copy of his enrollment form, his step-father noted that his place of birth was Honolulu, Hawaii. He had no reason to lie about that part back in 1967. Outside of the Bush family, how many people know at that early age that the kid would grow up to be president. That wouldn't even be a consideration for decades. As to his nationality being listed as Indonesian, check the INS on that: In particular what it takes for a minor child to relinquesh his US citizenship. Something like THAT would be readily available, but not a single person, be they a conservative, Teabagger, convicted felon, or any other member of the Republican party, has bothered to find that PUBLIC RECORD stating that Obama relinquished his US citizenship. This is especially important when a minor child selects to relinquish their citizenship based on a non-American step-parent. It's right there at http://travel.state.gov/law/citizenship/citizenship_776.html

If you have a site that shows your own college transcripts available for one and all, please show them. There is no secrecy to this. No other president has been required to show their college transcripts. Remember, this is not a constitutional requirement. (go ahead, check it out. If you don't have a copy of the US Constitution, I can e-mail it to you in pdf format) This is a non-issue, so your arguement is invalid.

As far as my working for McDonalds, when I applied there some years back, they said I was overqualified. But I've heard that a lot over the years.

I found this surprising considering Mr. Marrs virulent dislike and suspicion of Jews. Isn't Alex Jone's wife Jewish?

Just wondering.

Probably when hell freezes over. As educational records are not required for the position of POTUS, they were not released. Seems he won the election without providing them.

Nope. I am no relation to you.

Didn't say YOU were AWOL. Talking about that guy that held the office of POTUS from January, 2001 thru January of 2009. Just think, if Barbara had given George Sr a blow job, the country may not have gotten into as deep of trouble as it is in today.

Being of Scot-Irish descent, I will admit that there are enough drunks in my family tree. I enjoy a tipple or two now and then, myself, but when it takes 4 months to kill off a twelve pack of beer, and that's with help (I don't drink much, so I'm stingy with what I do buy. I still will offer a friend a beer on occassion) Coffee is my narcotic of choice.

> How old are you boy? Early 20s?

Well, since you've admited earlier (via graduation date) that you're an old fart, I'm still a few years behind ya. I was 20 when I got married 32 years ago. I felt I had to sink down to your level. I hit 50 over 2 years ago, and it hit back harder. I guess all those years of hard work (it sure wasn't partying) finally caught up to me. I miss working, but I'm either over-qualified for what's available, or unsuited for the position due to health reasons.

I may have to grow old, but I am not required to grow up. This has helped me in several career choices I've made over the years.

OK, well - they just sit there and get older, not doing you or anyone

Yes and? That still indicates you are a moron as none in my family were

I guess YOU'RE not the bright one when it comes to knowing that one person WITH THE VETO POWER TO CONTROL EDUCATION BILLS can, in fact, ruin an education system.

While doing some searching for ANY presidential education background and/or IQ information, I came across this:

"Barack Obama's estimated IQ score range is 130 to 148 and quite possibly higher. However, nowhere on the Internet can anyone locate Obama's IQ score. His college transcript from Harvard is not available and I cannot locate his college GPA, his SAT score, or his LSAT score, or any other tangible evidence of his IQ score.

However, after performing a bit of research the facts were uncovered reflecting his LSAT score while attending Harvard Law School. To much disappointment, we do not know his actual LSAT score. However, we found that the average LSAT score for all Harvard students during Barrack Obama's college years were 171. Furthermore,the percentile rank for an LSAT score of 171 at Harvard during Obama's college stay were 98.8 %.

MENSA will accept LSAT scores as a means of qualifying for MENSA membership. Please note that MENSA also accepts up to 200 various IQ tests as well other tests of mental acuity. The LSAT score required for MENSA membership is equal to a percentile of 95% or higher. Thus basing Barack Obama's estimated LSAT score of 171 ranks him in the top 98.8% percentile range which is clearly above the lowest acceptable LSAT percentage rank of 95% which clearly affirms that Obama has a qualifying intelligence quotient that would allow him acceptance into MENSA.

Since MENSA accepts many different IQ tests as well as other tests of mental acuity to qualify for MENSA, it is safe to estimate that Barack Obama's IQ score could range anywhere from a low IQ score of 130 based on the Stanford Binet IQ Test, to a high IQ score of 148 based on the Cattell IQ Test. Note both of these tests are acceptable tests that MENSA will accept for membership.

Another interesting fact about Obama is that he graduated from Harvard Law School with the honor of Magna Cum Laude which according to the Wikipedia definition...

'Magna Cum Laude" is graduating with great praise; an honor added to a diploma or degree for work considered greatly above average.'

Even though we cannot pin point Barack Obama's IQ Score, it is safe to assume that he has a high enough IQ score to be accepted into MENSA. Of course that is if he wanted to join MENSA."

Couldn't find anything about Bush's stuff at Yale. Guess he's hiding that because HE'S embarrassed about it. Wouldn't you agree? Or are Republican'ts exempt from your kind of scrutiny?

So which Leftwinger would that be? The Leftwing owns the school systems (public) in the US.

Fascinating that you give suppositions, maybes and theoretical circumstances about Obama, without a shred of evidence to support any of it..yet you blythly spew it all out and attack an ex president, whom you also have no data on.

Ricky old fag...thats typical behavior from a Leftwing Extremist.
Fantasy followed up by personal attack.

No wonder you are mentally ill.

He apparently seems unaware that the Leftwing has done to the African-American's education what the Klan could have only fervently prayed to do to it. I personally consider it a crime against humanity.

And a single person's veot for a short period cannot do the damage he imagine it does. But being a dullard he has to go with withnhe thinks he knows.

I may have to develop some more of my Rules of Leftist debate. But they have been so intellectually marginal lately it's kinda difficult.

Thanks for doing this. I have not yet heard Algeria on that frequency here on the West Coast, nor have I run across Radio Dabanga, Have heard Turkey, but lately their modulation seems very low despite reasonable carrier levels.

Let me see. Hmmmmm. Data that relates to whether Obama is the "moron" that you attacked him as being vs the absolute lack of ANY data on Bush.
Who is fantasizing here?

Obama is a moron. I'm a fag and leftwing extremist.
Who is delving into fantasy and following up with personal attacks?

Typical right wing tactics that have been around for decades: No facts - attack the questioner on a personal level.

What comment did I make that you took as a personal attack? Did I call you any of the nasty names you've used regarding me or Obama? NO! You just can't stand to be involved in a discussion with anyone that actually looks up information instead of spouting party rhetoric as fact.

As for me, I'll just plonk you. I'm sick and tired of this war of wits when I'm going up against an unarmed person.

I agree on the Robertson statement. FWIW though, I have all but one of Tex's books. Well written and he knows what he is talking about,

Indeed. Your copious lack of information about Obama is blown off like a breeze..but the hate starts coming out when you start blithering like a yak about the Ex president, Bush.

You do know that he has been out of office for over..over a year now..correct?

And yet the favorite tactic of the Leftwing Extremist is to bypass their parties inability to to jack shit, threaten to raise taxes and then blither ever on about Bush.

Sorry dumbfuck..he is out of office. The effects he may..may have had on the nation are over. The fact he had for the last two years of his term a Democrap majority in Congress is also overlook by you goat fuckers so when you blither on about "Its all the fault of Bush"..its an utter lie..because Democraps have controlled the law making, income generating and regulatory power in Congress for OVER 3 yrs.

And we really dont need to wonder about the mental ability of a community organizer to takes and uses a fucking teleprompter when visiting the 3rd grade of an elementary school, simply to say "good morning"

In less than 2 yrs..the People will simply rise up and kill all of you Leftards, and Ill be happy as hell to hear the news of the bloodbath you Leftwing Extremist Fringe Kooks have invited on yourself for the past 45+ yrs. Once you are dead and gone, bulldozed into mass graves, the country can return to its Constitutional roots and get back to being a free, beloved and productive nation.

And you and yours will still be dead.

Which frankly...works for me.

Let me recap here:

You've, so far, called me a Leftwing Extremest, a fag, a dumbfuck, a Leftard and a kook.

I have called you no names at all.

You have said that I live by fantasy and then resort to personal attacks.

Who's living in the fantasy world?

As a matter of fact, I do believe you are violating your party's own policies by preaching armed insurection. I do believe you could be jailed for that, no matter which party is in office. Come on over "Gunnar Asch" (a fucking nazi retard name if I ever heard one - how's that for a personal attack?) and bring your guns with you. I'll meet you mano a mano and see who is on the recieving end of the "bloodbath" you're so eager to start.

I'm not a grammar nazi, as a rule, but there are two glaring errors here, one of which is critical to your response...

1) The person's nym is "Gunner", not "Gunnar", generally referring to a position within the armed services.

2) "Mano a Mano" gets misused all the time (including on AFN public service announcements). It's meaning, contrary to popular belief, is NOT 'man to man'. It's actual meaning is "hand to hand", refererring primarily to a handshake during a face to face meeting, although it can refer to single combat as well.

Sorry.. down off my soapbox now..

1, I preach nothing. I do however make observations. Im a trained observer. Nothing more, and nothing less. And I cannot be jailed for Observations, no matter how much you wish. Because by the time the Leftards get that attempted crime legistlation into their skulls filled with mush..the People will have simply bulldozed them into mass graves and covered them with a nice layer of sod or seed.

So now you are advocating a duel? You do know that is against the law, do you not?

Dumbfucks like you always accuse others of breaking the law..in error..and then go ahead and commit at the least..a crime that can get you at least one year in jail.

Did I mention I used to be a cop, after I left the Army? Quite some years ago however. Now Im just a firearms competitor and instructor. A lovable harmless fuzzball who will be sitting on his front porch, banjo in hand, listening to the rising body counts over the radio. (observation)

As for my Nym...your ignorance continues to amaze and amuse me. Not only did you get the spelling wrong, but the linkage you attached it to couldnt be farther from the truth. Another symptom of your Fart Leftwing Extremist Fringe Kook buffoonery and obvious symptoms of mental illness. Your ignorance continues to astound me. But then..you ARE a LefTard..so it doesnt really surprise me.

Now piss off fagboy. Im sure there is a bathhouse thats calling out for you somewhere.

Very nicely done and very accurate. Though to be fair..in common vernacular in some places in Mexico..mano y mano does mean armed, usually a knife, combat. But those places tend to be rough, raw and hideouts for drug lords, pimps and other low lives. Hummm...he does tend to fit those catagories, now doesnt he?

As for my Nym...a google search will bring up the name..and who and what tGunner Herbert Asch was. (a fictional charector but....)

And the poor wank will continue to exhibit utter buffoonery in his follow up posts.

Its in his nature.

Rhetoric like this invites increased surveillance. Ms. Napolitano was criticised for warning us about the rise of the dangerous lunatic fringe from within, and here we have living breathing proof.

The K3 has a better receiver than the R75, but the fact that it has better receiver specs than the R75 does not imply that it would be a better radio for you than the R75. The K3 is is a contest rig, designed for use in extremely crowded, contest-type band conditions and deep CW pileups. This is why it's a favorite on DXpeditions when people know there'll be hundreds of people calling them simultaneously. If you spend a signficant amount of time operating under these conditions, then you should definitely get the K3. On the other hand, if you're more interested in DXing utility stations and that kind of thing, then you might never hear anything on the K3 that you could not hear on the R75. Spending your money on new antennas, phasing units or other odds and ends might give you more bang for your buck in that case.

Well, 9590 was back today. And 6020 is still a mess at 13:00.

There used to be a whole string of their regional stations on 5 Mhz, but I thought that they had been shut down, so I've not tried recently.
(One really quiet night a couple of decades ago they were all there laid out just like in Passport).

There's also a whole lot more noisy electronics in my neighborhood since then, making that band a bit irritating to monitor, even with a noise canceler box.

One of these days I'll find one at the same time I have some spare cash.
I always find one when I'm a couple hundred short. Or, if I have a big wad of cash, it's not worth half what a decent one goes for.

Don't tell me, he's the one buying them. He should be popping for a new one soon when the next new models come out. I might try to offer him what the trade in is, but at the level they are, the trade in is a decent chunk of change. The lenses carry over, so all he would be selling me is the 50mm one that usually comes with them.

Doc! NHK sent me a response to my query about QSL submittal. They say that reception reports can be submitted at their normal contact page:

https://www.nhk.or.jp/nhkworld/english/contact/index.html and that they will respond with a QSL card. I already sent them one by snailmail, but you may wish to try the e-mail route.

FWIW, I have submitted QSL requests, with return postage included, to two hams I heard the other night during contest calls (Slovakia & Argentina). I will report back any positive results as they come in.

Some DSLRs come with decent kit lenses. My Canon did not at the time (Canon hear the outcry, and the new ones Canon provides are considerably better as starter lenses). So, a kit lens is worth a try (the internet has lots of reviews, including well-conducted technical reviews, of glass quality, and some kit lenses fare well enough).

Hi, Steve - My interest is primarily AM and SSB phone, both BC and ham reception, and yes, sometimes in crowded bands and under RF duress (I have several dozen local hams nearby and some potent 50 kW blowtorch AM stations within a couple miles, and they are a constant nuisance - a brick wall front end would be nice). The R75 is a fine sensitive receiver and I get great results with the antennas I have (on my 5,000k foot lot, much more would be severe overkill), but in this environment, a top-notch level of dynamic range and adjacent rejection would be nice.

Apparently I do, since I've never met anyone who is as picky about pitch as I am. When I was doing RTTY, I had a scope, but it was just something to watch that was neat looking, I could even tune in FDM stuff by ear. I got a 5" scope at a pawn shop not too far from where the old Universal store was for $60. It had a blue filter on it, and visitors were always impressed by the giant + sign.

I miss the RTTY stuff. I did have about 5 years of that and FAX before a lot of the good stuff disappeared in January 1990, and about 10 years later, a lot of SITOR stuff was gone too. There was some really funny stuff on the marine channels. I have a huge, like 20 feet long, printout of a list of "issues" on a cruise ship, including the chief engineer going nuts and attempting to attack people with a wrench. The "issues" ranged from not enough lifeboats, and the ones they had were rotten, the food coolers were almost dead, and a bunch of food had spoiled. There were no life preservers, no fire extinguishers, and on and on, and on.

After a while, I thought, "Why don't they sink the damn thing?"

I hear ya about the noisy electornics. Yecchh.

Mongolia is on 12 MHz now; not perfectly situated band-wise for 2-3 AM (U.S. West Coast) listening, but once in awhile you catch it just right...

The listed 12.085 MHz freq is still good from 1030 to 1100z in English...

I can't think of a good one that is.

Mine are:

Guns.
PCs.
Ham and SW radio
Hifi
Cars.
Dogs.

And sooner or later, I'll be biting on an RC truck or helicopter, it's just a matter of time. I'll go out with the friend who is into all that, and I get hooked again. About 20 years ago, I got into it pretty heavy, but the constant wrecking of the car I had got to be ridiculous.
They have some trucks and buggies now, electric ones, that go well over 60 MPH, and if you have the $$, you can go over 80.

If you fly, and have insane money, you can get yourself something like these, and really fly:

Hey, Doc! NHK has told me that you can submit a reception report

Just include the usual items, and they'll send you a QSL by mail, so I

Chuckle..I dont drink booze at all, dont own a Lazyboy, pay for shared internet and really dont advocate the Great Cull. In fact..Ive mentioned that it will be a terrible thing, with nearly all Leftwingers dying or leaving the nation. Terrible thing when it happens.

But..shrug..it appears its gonna happen. How will one know when they start killing off up to 1.5 million Leftwingers? Good question. Perhaps they might mention it on the Tube?

I have both. The K3 hears more than the R75. You'll need to spend extra for SWL/ute monitoring as there is another set of (non ham band) switched bandpass filters for the front end required, as well as a hi-fi roofing filter. But you'd then have one of the better SWL receivers ever made for about 2 grand.

Sorry Charlie. You cannot use isolated incidents widely spaced in time, picked and chosen for their specific political impact, to paint an accurate scientific picture of climate or any other long-term entity. Liberty Post KNOWS this but they have managed to hook you on their line.

By the way, California has had it's warmest winter I can remember.
Proof positive that global warming is happening! :-D

I guess what irritates me a great deal is that I got nothing to eat. One fellow I told that I was hungry asked me if I wanted some crackers and cheese.

Never came.

Meanwhile, gal in cube next to me who was brought in by State Police (nothing against them, don't take this the wrong way) got a full frickin meal within an hour.

I was there from say 10 AM to 1:30 PM.

And yes, I've already complained, and got blown off.

Sorry for the complaint, but I'm a bit irritated.

And, let me add, that when I called and complained to the patient advocate, I asked specifically if any of my complaints hinged upon my receiving Medicare. She said no, the folks providing treatment know nothing about an individuals benefits.

I then asked her just why every single person I spoke with, knew, and indicated to me, that they were aware that I was on Medicare.

I got shut down real quick.

Please don't be so disingenuous.

1) Both wars are still going, costing American lives and dollars. They started on Bush's watch and DISPROVE your contention that the country is no longer feeling the effects of Bush.

2) I call it "phony" because Bush and Cheney themselves BOTH said "No WMDs, no connection to 9/11". So the questions beg to be asked; "Why are we there? Why have 4000 American kids died (and more horribly maimed), almost a TRILLION dollars spent." For what? If that doesn't define "phony", I don't know what does.

1) Well, the Republican Wall Street Journal says the financial mess started 4Q '07 - 1Q '08, squarely on Bush's watch.

2) Yes, the Democrats were there for two years, but that means the Repubs were there for SIX years. 6 is a bigger number than 2. Check your calculator.

3) Dems for two years or not, Bush still had veto power. It's odd we didn't see him use it.

Huh? The mission was to kill Saddam? The same Saddam that had -no- WMDS?
(as admitted to by Bush/Cheney)

The same Saddam that had -nothing- to do with 9/11? (as admitted to by Bush/Cheney)

THAT Saddam?

We the taxpayers sure got screwed if killing Saddam was the mission -- 4000 American kids dead, a lot more horribly maimed, approaching a trillion dollars in actual costs and eight years to get rid of one guy? If getting rid of Saddam was, as you say, the mission, we would have been waaay better off sub-contracting the Saddam job to the Mafia. :-)

Huh???

BUSH dragged it out for EIGHT years and O has been in office only ONE year -- and yet you ask why -Obama- is dragging it out? Sorry, Sparky, do the math.

Finally, IMHO, it is "dragging out" because there is NO EXIT STRATEGY -- exactly as stated by Bush I in his own book. W painted us into a corner that Obama ...or McCain... or anybody...would have a difficult time getting us out. We are damned if we stay (more American lives, money) and damned if we leave (major Middle East instability). No exit strategy for anyone of any political party. Thank you, W.

Well, once again, you totally missed the main point.

MAIN POINT:

In one single sentence, you insult someone about "personal attacks", and then you make...a personal attack. Very hypocritical of you.

It's a simple point. What part of it didn't you understand?

Instead of blathering and whining about it, why don't you just man up and admit you put your foot in it?

P.S. If you want carry on an intelligent debate, it would greatly improve your credibility if you would lose the name calling, personal attacks and vulgarity. If your behavior here is any indication at all, it would go a long way towards explaining why you are an EX-cop.

Good question. I've tried to contact the CEO, the CEO's secretary, etc. Get voice mail.

I've contacted an attorney.

Like I stated before, I wasn't even offered a frickin glass of water.

Bingo!

Civil war..or in the soon to happen Genocide of Leftwingers...not treason in the slightest.

Nasty bit of work coming up over the horizon. Best have enough arms and ammo to do whats necessary. Or enough rope or my personal

Because they are just as stupid as you are. No more, no less.

Pity about that.

I have an excellent condition Drake r8B FS its been boxed for the last 5 years. I did test on the service monitor and used it for a week to check it out. performs as new. I am the original owner and bought it from Universal back when they announced they were going to D/c the units.
I had a spinner knob put on it. That's the only mod Universal put the VHF unit in it for me.

Sorry the room service was bad, but how about the rest of the story?

Hospital in Holland? GR?

The pain is from your auto accident? Back pain?

More importantly than the food, did they get the pain under control?
TIMS machine, oxycontin, other?

If chronic pain, have you gone to a clinic that specializes in that (versus just going in to the ER)?

Holland. And interestingly, the taxi driver who picked me up for my ride home told me that he and his family no longer go there. He said that it may be a bit longer ride, but they go to Zeeland now. He said that they are friendlier, and that they've received better treatment.

Not the first time I've heard that.

Yes, I have gone to a clinic. Good results there until recently, but that may be due to miscommunication on my part (I'm not perfect, nor do I claim to be).

I might add that I've not eaten a thing since late Friday, or, early Saturday. I told the folks at the hospital that yesterday, and today. And, today, as I was reminded earlier, is Tuesday.

To be honest, when I got back home this afternoon, I still thought it was the darn weekend.

I remember something on tv news, the Vancouver Olympics used a snow making machine, or maybe they trucked in some snow from somewhere? Meanwhile the Northeast and the middle Atlantic States set some snow records this Winter.The Weather machine is a very complicated machine.

Um, because that was -not- YOUR original point. You clearly have a reading comprehension problem.

YOUR original point, YOUR contention was that "the country is no longer feeling the effects of Bush". I clearly disproved that by bringing up the two wars that Bush started. Yes, Obama may or may not have tweaked them a little, but the bottom line is those wars are Bush's babies and yes, we the country are still feeling the effects.

> So why did all your bed buddies on the left spend us into the Great > Depression Part Deux?

That's odd. I believe the record shows that Clinton left Bush a surplus and Bush, spending like a drunken sailor (and giving no end of gifts to his Big Business buddies) turned it into a deficit. Look it up.

An OBSERVATION?

1) You called Rick a "fag".

Odd that you blame Bush, when only ONE Democrat didnt vote to go to Iraq..and to keep funding the war. And oddly enough..that Democrat was..wait for it...Obama.

Now he is INCREASING the war. Are you claiming then that he was lying when he made the promise to pull us out within 6 months of his election?

It would sure appear that you then voted for a Liar then, doesnt it?

But then..you always were stupid, wentcha?

Seems that you, with no knowledge of me whatsoever..are making up lies.
You dont have a clue if Im gay or not, do you?

Not all gays are light in the loafer swishes. Guy I was in the Rangers with..was black, 6'9", 275lbs, buff, trim, hard core killer and queer as a 3 dollar bill. We used to go to the bar together, Id score a hot chick, he would score a hot dude..shrug..no big deal. We killed a lot of NVA together. Hell..I could have started walking on the other side of the street since then.

But you will never know one way or another. Im not a big fan of whiney, buffoonish little retards of any gender preference. Deal with it Bruce..

You may also believe in the easter bunny..but Clinton didnt leave a surplus. Check the CBO figures. Then beat your head against a brick wall for looking so stupid and ignorant.

Bush was a Rino in most of his policies..and yes..we are going to be paying for several of them for years. But he gave us those policies to gain the cooperation of the Far Leftwing Extremist Fringe Kooks who control the DNC. After all...virtually ALL of the Democrats not only voted for the war in Iraq and Afhangistan..but have continued to fund

it..along with the utterly stupid bail outs of AGM and the rest.

And your crowd has been in charge of Congress for 3 yrs now..and the Oval Orfice for over a year..and things are not getting better..in fact..they are going to get far far worse under their control.

So thank you Leftard Fuckwit and Co.

But then..you wont live to see Obamas possible attempt at running for a second term.

Which..shrug..works for me.

Radio Dabanga was a surprise because I have never heard of it, and no way I would have identified it except they actually said "Radio Dabanga". I like to know where they are transmitting out of though, I've read conflicting stuff.

"First Law of Leftist Debate
The more you present a leftist with factual evidence that is counter to his preconceived world view and the more difficult it becomes for him to refute it without losing face the chance of him calling you a racist, bigot, homophobe approaches infinity.

This is despite the thread you are in having not mentioned race or sexual preference in any way that is relevant to the subject." Grey Ghost

God, guns and guts made America great.

And Janet Napolitano nervous.

Which should tell you all you need to know about Democrats. How can one

Well that's a great question - and they have a pretty hip website, so my guess is that it isn't from Sudan per se, despite it's pedigree as a vehicle for Darfur news.

If you can QSL them, it may have a transmitter site.

My apologies for the fingers that couldn't spell that night.

As for the Nym .. very accurate actually. Gunner Asch had nothing but contempt and derision for the American soldiers and hated his FELLOW nazis as well. Just like you; a nazi who has contempt for Americans who also happen to be his FELLOW citizens.

Don't you just hate it when everything you espouse can only be hatred for everyone and everything around you?

As to the "mano a mano", I'll let you choose; hand to hand, knife or gun. I choose neutral ground. But then, to you, there is no neutral ground. Not any you don't hate, that is.

I spent my time in hell, too. 'Nam wasn't a picnic for me. I actually fought, not spending my time as an instructor so I could spit on my fellow Americans and claim veteran preferential treatment so nobody could spit on me. I DID, in fact, get spit on when I got home. You going to do that to our current returning heroes? Sounds like it to me since many of them are Democrats (not all, but enough for your "Great Cull" to include them, as well).

All your replies and not a single one with any substance to substantiate your claims and accusations. Typical. Throw the bullshit and expect everyone to accept it like empty headed morons. Sorry, only Republican'ts do that.

Enjoy your waning years. You can't possibly live long enough to see that Great Cull of yours to come about. There are too many intelligent people to allow keep it from happening. Too bad you're not one of them.

Again you shit in your hat. Ive never mentioned "Democrats" as targets for the cullers. Only their worst far left extremist fringe kook handlers. Think of it as freeing the slaves from da ebil dud wi da whips.

My Great Cull? Where did you get that buffoonish idea? Im an old man..and Ill be sitting on the front porch, listening to the rising body counts coming over the radio. Course..Ill have something shootable at hand..just in case a Far Leftwinger (rare in this county) flees past.

Just to protect him. Of course. Indeed. Oh fuck yes.

Ive asked that those that might dispose of you send me at the least, a face shot of you after you are gone..and if Im lucky..they will send me a several hour video of your passing under the knife and red hot poker/vegitable slicer/barbed wire body sling etc etc.

Ill have to wait and see if I get something. Shrug..they may not bother satisifying my sense of propriety in a job well done. So your end may not ever be brought to the light of day. But with luck...<VBG>

Enjoy your remaining time. But please..ease off the drugs..you already go through life fucked up in the head..so lay off them, and enjoy the new smells and sounds and vision.
While you still can.

I have never owned a Jupiter, but a friend of mine has one and I've had the opportunity to use it. I was definitely impressed. Very nice audio and extremely user-friendly to boot. I wasn't too crazy about the display on the Jupiter, but mainly because I don't like big displays on rigs in general. The Jupiter is a good value, I think.

God, guns and guts made America great.

And Janet Napolitano nervous.

Which should tell you all you need to know about Democrats. How can one restore America to greatness if greatness makes you uncomfortable?

You're right - bad things are not funny, especially when they happen to one's self. I did not know you were in an auto accident; I am truly sorry to hear about it; I hope that some combination of health providers and therapy can help you get beyond whatever pain you have ASAP.

Well, at least you're awake and about - that's a good thing. Hang in there, you're a tough guy and you'll get through it.

I've finally got something arranged, all I gotta do is make through another night.

Can I share with with you the lyrics of an old friend who is no longer with us, 'Eight Ball Blues', by Steve Goodman:

Well I wish I had some memories
That I'd keep inside my trunk
I wish I had a nickel for every beer I've drunk
And I wish I had me a sailing ship
That'd take me over the sea.
I wish I could talk you in to coming home with me
Is this the part where I came in
I've heard this song before
Had a couple too many
but I think I can find the door

And I do not know your name my friend
But I've seen that face before
Well I saw it in the Jail House
and I saw in the War and I saw it my mirror
Well just a couple of times before

I wish I was the Candyman sweet as I could be
In every town the ladies hang 'round
Just to get a taste of me
I wish I was an opry star
Or had me a Ph. D.
I wish I had the common sense to be satisfied with me
Is this the part where I came in
I've heard this song before
Had a couple too many
but I think I can find the door
And I do not know your name my friend
But I've seen that face before
Well I saw it in the Jail House
and I saw in the War
Well I saw it my mirror
Well just a couple of times before

I wish I had a magic pocket, That'd keep all my money in
I wish I knew a good excuse for all of my mortal sins
Well they say 'to know the best in life, you gotta know the worst
I wish that I had been the clown, who thought up that one first
Is this the part where I came in
I've heard this song before
Had a couple too many
But I think I can find the door
And I do not know your name my friend
But I've seen that face before

Hey, I saw it in the Jail House
and I saw in the War
Well I saw it in the mirror
A couple of times before
Let me tell you
I saw it in the Jail House it was on the post office door and I saw it on my mirror
a couple of times before
Good People I saw it in the jail house Saw it in the war lord I saw it in the mirror
==========

Michael, That sounds interesting. It sounds like someone could write a book called Electronic Projects Using The IF Output Jack. FM detector sounded interesting. Is there any 455 kHz to 12 kHz DRM converters out there or can anyone could help me link to some.
Thanks.

The power establishments favorite errand boy Bill O' Reilly was on the radio today enthusiastically gushing how wonderful and necessary a national identity card for every American is.

This is coming from the same flunkie who fanatically promoted the illegal invasion of Iraq because "it's essential...Saddam has WMD's... blah blah blah".

This is coming from the same tool who was one of the loudest cheerleaders for the $1,000,000,000,000 bailout for the bankers because "it is absolutely essential to prevent a total collapse of the ecomomy". I can still hear the arrogant asshole smugly dismissing anyone who disagreed with him saying "you just don't understand the situation".

Given Bill O's the Clown track record of being so completely wrong on every major policy decision I think we should pass on the national ID card.

It really is astonishing that this usher has any credibility left. But I guess when your target audience is Mr. & Mrs. Idiot American credibility isn't a prerequisite.

What is the next issue his handlers will order him to sell? Gun confiscation for our own safety? After all, he is always telling us that he "is the only one looking out for the folks".
Uh huh.

Gee thanks Bill - now go get your FG SHINE BOX.

All main stream media, including FOX, is owned by a select few corporations which are run by the global bankers. This is why it is important to seek out alternative media outlets. Democracy Now http://www.democracynow.org is excellent and Amy Goodman is one of the best investigative journalists working today.

Monday I received a letter from the US Census Bureau telling me I willl receive another letter in about one week. Mailed first class, printed in 5 languages and sent to 120 million households.

Minnesota Public Radio’s Bob Collins did the math and came up with these numbers:

"There were 105,480,101 households in 2000. At 500 sheets of paper per ream, that’s 210,960 reams of paper for the letter. It’s cheap paper, though. At $40 a case, Office Max has the cheapest price I could find online, so that’s $843,000 for the paper.

Five-hundred envelopes go for $30. That’s another $6.3 million (I’m rounding up and down here; it’s the government afterall).

Finally, there’s the cost of mailing. It’s presorted first-class mail. According to the U.S. Postal Service Web site, pre-sorted mail costs .335, although a standard rate letter could be sent for 17 cents. But this was first-class. Total: $35,335,833.83.

Total: $42.5 million to send you a letter to tell you you’re going to get another letter next week. Oh, and sending a postcard would’ve been $15.8 million cheaper.

The average person pays $13,000 in federal taxes per year. So it took the annual federal taxes of nearly 327 taxpayers to send you the letter."

20 BILLION? Who are you, Carl Sagan or something? :-D

I am convinced that the folks at Fox:

1 - Don't really pay attention to the detail of what they are talking about - it's not their job -

2 - Make up stuff and pretend to their audience that it's news - that IS their job.

I get MY news from Radio New Zealand International.

I agree - probably a waste of money, although if it helps 1% of the people it is intended to reach to understand what the heck the census is, it might be worth it.

Still, it is only 0.00003% or so of the federal budget. Considering that a lot more money than that gets wasted on lots of truly idiotic things, I cannot get too worked up about this, when the Census is required by the Constitution.

Also consider that the census now is done by mail; if it were done the traditonal way - by people on foot, door-to-door - it would cost a whole lot more.

I'm new to these newsgroups and amateur radio. I would like to study for my ticket but am confused on the dates of the question pools.

In the Mar '09 issue of CQ magazine, an article on A Beginner's Guide To Becoming a Ham Radio Operator, element 3 dates are given as, "Element 3 (General) pool between July 1, 2007 and June 30, 2011".
Yet, two study guides I've dwnlded (pdf) from the web, both give the ending year for General as 2010. Which is it? What am I missing?

Another question. Being a big usenet user, but new to amateur radio, I've been looking at all the groups available. This one appeared to have the least noise for a general discussion group, so I posted here.
Is this type of question ok, here, or is there a more appropriate group for rank newbie questions I'm sure to be pestering the ham community with? ;)

My kind of weather. Beats this boring nonsense here in California.

Give me thunder! Blizzards! Tornadoes! Hurricanes! Anything but 2 months of gentle rain and 7 months of sun (and three months of undecided).

Hi, notbob - I am not really up on amateur radio regs just now, but I can tell you, you've caught this newsgroup at a relatively stable and noise-free time. It is usually 90% wackos. I would love to see it stay this way, but no guarantees.

I'll bet it is. Nice T-Storms and blizzardy weather. Also has the benefit of both oceans (maybe all three? How does the Arctic ice skip a signal?) to receive bounce across, at least some programs generally aimed your way, and good positioning for graylines on lots of days. Not too many big cities to screw up reception either.

I bet you even see an aurora once in awhile :-)

Western Massachusetts used to be nice for all of this too. Ah, the Different question pools have different expiration dates.

Here are the dates for current question pools:

Technician class (Element 2) Pool is effective July 1, 2006 and is valid until June 30, 2010.

General class (Element 3) Pool is effective July 1, 2007 and is valid until June 30, 2011.

Extra class (Element 4) Pool is effective July 1, 2008 and is valid until June 30, 2012.

You need to pass the Tech test before you can take the General.

You need to pass General before you can take Extra.

If you pass one test, you can take the next test immediately. I took Tech and General on the same day. If I'd had time to prepare ahead of time, I could have taken Extra too.

This web site has some good practice tests:

< http://www.qrz.com/testing.html >

It is worth looking for a local ham radio club as often they'll be able to help you find testing sessions.

Well you're really confused, because this newsgroup has nothing to do with amateur radio. There's a whole hierarchy, rec.radio.amateur.* that's intended for that. They cover a wide variety of topics, and there's even a moderated one.

This newsgroup is about listening. "Shortwave" is in the title since it sort of defined what the newsgroup was supposed to be about, the same way that back forty years "SWL" meant "shortwave listening" but often the same people also did BCB DXing and monitoring the public service bands. It's a description of the type of person, not the spectrum to be covered.

That confuses a lot of people, they think this is for amateur radio because it's "shortwave". But it was never meant to be a place to discuss amateur radio, beyond discussing monitoring the ham bands (which has always had some followers). The charter defines that, and the fact that there is a whole hierarchy intended for amateur radio should also reinforce that. Besides. amateur radio isn't just about shortwave, indeed while once you couldn't really get a ham license without starting out on the shortwave bands, now I suspect there are a good percentage, maybe even a small majority, who have never operated on the shortwave bands.

My thanks to both Mark H. and Michael for their reponses. Both informative, and this one philosophically worthy as well.

I am currently thinking of getting an amateur license actually, even if I never get on the air. Not sure why - I used to have one decades ago (WB1GAL), and never got it off the ground due to inherent limitations in manual dexterity (back then, code was de rigueur; now it is optional for most all classes)...the theory and regs were more or less a snap, even though I am not an electronics guy...

Maybe just for the cachet - we Californians are all about superficial appearance and keeping up, after all ;-) SWL is still my first love when it comes to radio.

I hope you won't give up on code. It doesn't require a lot of manual dexterity to send code at a reasonable rate. You might not become a speed demon sending/copying code at 50 wpm, but who cares? You can have a ton of fun on the CW portions of the bands.

When I first got my license I had no intention of learning code. I figured I'd stay mostly on the voice portion of the bands, but my interests in the hobby kept expanding. Soon I was active in digital modes like RTTY and PSK-31. Now I spend 99% of my time operating in CW mode with a paddle and keyer, and it's about a thousand times more addictive than any other part of the hobby I've encountered thus far. Well worth the initial investment of time and energy to learn code.

Steve, I want to present a different direction. IMHO he should study for and take the technician exam as soon as possible. (assuming he is in the US). Then he should get a 2m HT and get on the local repeaters.

Being on the air is a good way to meet other hams, and find an elmer (ham lingo for a mentor). Then he can move up in class, branch out into other things, such as learning morse code, etc.

No matter what method you choose to learn morse code, it's a lot easier and more fun with someone to help you and communicate with.

I highly recommend Code Quick, by Dr Gerry Wheeler.

Yes, my guess is if you filter out posts with any of the following words in the subject line, the group will be fine:

the usual naughty words
"hd radio"
iboc ibiquity arbitron kelp obama democrats republicans

Steve - I gave up on code 30 years ago after working at it two years and never getting beyond about 7 WPM. For me, the words 'manual dexterity' are an oxymoron. Same with guitar, piano and typing. No soap. My fingers might as well be made of stone. A lifelong lid.

RTTY? Not a chance.

No biggie - I'm happy :-)

Even when the questions change (i.e. the pool expires), usually 80% of the questions carry to the next period. If you study by learning the material and not the questions, this shouldn't be a problem.

Yeah, I know - but you should see me type. What you see on this page is not what comes out of my fingers...this is the result of painstaking review and correction, often multiple times. If I sent RTTY, it would look like gibberish...

The only thing that I can type quickly and correctly is...

As an addendum - imagine yourself with large thick cold stiff gloves on your hands. Now imagine that your hands and your mind don't communicate properly. Then, place them a paddle or a keyboard, and try having something sensible come out the first time.

You'd be me.

It's OK - I'm happy :-)

I agree and will learn code if it kills me. Speaking of which, one motivation is that poor soul who died in OR a couple years ago. Remember James Kim, who got lost on a back road and then stranded with his family in deep Dec snows? Here's a guy who reviewed hi-tech gadgets like PDAs and cell-phones for a living. Yet, for all his know-how, he died alone and unable to call for help.

That scared the crap outta me. Though I'm no ham and have never had a license or even a CB, I know how CW, even QRP, could have probably saved this guy. Yet, he was clueless of even the most basic radio technology. Frightening. I swore then, it would never happen to me and I'm set on learning code and learning QRP radio.

I just checked out a 15 yr old ARRL Handbook and the last down rev ARRL general study guide from the library. Outta keep my mind busy for awhile. ;)

Bruce,

It's a fun radio, the G5 that is, rarely overloads, and does the job off the whip. I prefer it over the 750 (which I returned) because it's much more portable. It's the perfect size in my opinion. Only wish it had a 5khz tuning instead of the 1khz.

I got a G6 I use also but always need to hook up a wire via a gator clip to get good reception on. The G6 with a set of headphones does well. Deaf on longwave and useless on the airband.

My 350SL just sits in my shed now as a radio if I am working outside.

My G8 is my latest radio. It sucks on shortwave, overloads badly but is a good AM dxing radio. I would say equal to the G5 on AM reception.

If you ever care to see a good John Ford movie about a Welsh mining family, I strongly suggest "How Green was My Valley" (1941) with Walter Pidgeon, Anna Lee, Donald Crisp, a very young Roddy McDowell and lovely Maureen O'Hara. The 1939 book was by - Richard Llewellyn.
On Fox Classic DVD. A masterpiece.

Far better would have been a satellite based emergency locator transmitter.
Originaly designed for airplanes, they are available for hikers, etc.

As for CW, even QRP saving him, it's possible but not likely. HF location is too coarse to find him, unless he had a GPS unit and was able to transmit an SOS with the correct coordinates, had a big enough antenna to be heard, and so on.

I have a 10m HT and can "work the world" (or at least access 10m repeaters in the US and EU), but only when the band is open. It is not likely it will be until the middle of the current sunspot cycle, which is 4-5 years away if we are lucky.

A VHF HT is not going to be of any use, unless he happens to get lost or snowed in to a valley with a repeater on the mountain above.

Yes, we have a repeater here in Jerusalem that had to be moved to a different frequency because it was interfering with one on Crete, but that's tropspheric ducting, over water, and our repeater was at 3500 feet asl.

It also depends upon finding a frequency that someone is listening on, in a lot of places if you want road help, etc you are better off on CB.

Learn morse code if you want to, build and operate QRP if you want to, take a radio backpacking if you want to, but IMHO you are not going to really improve your chances if you are buried in a snow drift, or lost while hiking out in the middle of the forest.

A 2m HT may not help if you're really out in the sticks, but they have a much longer range than a cell phone.

In the car with a mobile antenna I reliably reach a repeater that's 30 miles away with my VX-8r. Handheld with the standard antenna, I can often reach it, but not reliably.

And of course there are many other repeaters that are closer than that in CT.

The VX8r also has an optional GPS that can automatically send your location through APRS.

Yep. When I first looked them up a few years ago, the prices were prohibitive. Now, world level locators are down to the same as a good HT and continental locators down to $100.

So I'm rapidly learning.

Spent much of last night reading ARRLs older Gen class book. A real eye opener. I need to get the technician book tuit de suit and knuckle down. I actually know most of the math and basic electronics in general class, but am so damn rusty it'll take awhile to clear out these geezer cobwebs. I think better to get my element 2 license and get on the air and worry about general class and QRP fantasies, later.

Thanks for the reaity check. ;)

there are a few differences in the way the external antenna socket is the first version has a stereo jack for the antenna jack, and and external LW and MW antenna can be hooked up.

I'm beginning to agree with you, Geoffrey. I'm pretty far out there.
I'm within twenty miles of two small towns (2-4K pop), but 100 miles from any real metro. So far, I've only located one local club and I'm not really sure they are hams at all (repeater assn). I'm beginning to think getting on-line and getting an affordable HT is the way to go, if only to connect with some radio ppl. There's got to be some hams somewhere around here. Lot of remote farms and homes, hereabouts.

Apparently, there's one ham near me, but he may be seasonal, this being mainly a snowbird park. If I get on-line, I'd have a much better chance of finding an elmer. So, I'm temporarily dismissing the romantic aspects of ham radio and ordering/joining ARRL. I will go ahead and build the code oscillator in this general manual. I have most of the parts and a cheapo key and have downloaded a couple computer code programs (G4fon, Just Learn Code, etc) and will plug along while I fast-track the traditional get-a-license approach.

Thank you to everyone who took the time to reply, even if I'm in the wrong group. It was all good info and much appreciated.

As a rule, I don't like moderated usenet groups, but will watch it. I'm watching three other rra groups, but despite enormous server retention, there seems to be almost no current traffic. I joined eham.net and will look at other web forums. Thanks for your comments.

I don't care for the moderated groups either - but if, as you suggested, a noise-free group is what you're looking for, moderated is the way to go. If you posted there, you'd probably get some responses. In any case, the eham route is also a good one, that should work out well for you. Best of fortune!

Liberty Net for Week of March 6-13

http://3950.net/2010/03/liberty-net-for-week-of-march-6-13/

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

IONOSPHERIC propagation was much better for this weekï¿½s Liberty Net ï¿½ the sunspot numbers are inching up into a more reasonable range ï¿½ and the discussions were intense and the personal stories gripping.

You can listen online or download the recording right here at http://3950.net

Here are just a few examples of what was covered during the Net this week:

ï¿½ An Oregon man who imports ï¿½Airsoftï¿½ plastic-BB toy guns found himself attacked ï¿½ and his business ruined ï¿½ by the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms (BATF), which made the totally absurd claim that the toys ï¿½could be modifiedï¿½ into fully automatic machine guns and that they were ï¿½a terrorist threatï¿½ to ï¿½national security.ï¿½ (22 minutes)

ï¿½ Too many patriots are willing to lay all the blame for Americaï¿½s ills on Obama ï¿½ but the truth is he is merely the latest in a long line of puppets of the financial elite going back many generations. (31 minutes)

ï¿½ Obama is now allowing rappers ï¿½ such as ï¿½Jay-Zï¿½ ï¿½ into the White House. ï¿½Jay-Zï¿½ (whose lyrics promote pimping and are characterized by extreme obscenity and sexual degradation of women) is worth many millions and is an Obama donor. In 1999 he stabbed a radio executive in the stomach. (39 minutes)

ï¿½ The head of the Detroit public school system is a near-illiterate and cannot write a coherent sentence. (43 minutes)

ï¿½ Bankers are now ï¿½cooking the booksï¿½ by counting their liabilities as ï¿½assets.ï¿½ (1 hour 3 minutes)

ï¿½ The banking establishment is openly talking about using ï¿½legalï¿½ and even more severe methods of punishing countries which refuse to ï¿½repayï¿½ the money that the banks created out of nothing. Meanwhile, small countries ï¿½ especially those who defy the banksters ï¿½ find their currencies under leveraged attack from anonymous (but very well funded) speculators. (1 hour 5 minutes)

ï¿½ What is driving the increasing construction of impenetrable ï¿½panic roomsï¿½ in the homes of the very wealthy? (4 hours 22 minutes)

ï¿½ The personal story of a man who once was a dot-com multimillionaire and has now found happiness in being a survivalist and philosopher ï¿½ and driving a truck. How different the up-and-coming minor wealthy (who are the intelligent, successful people we need to form a new leadership class) are from the robber baron super-rich (who are mostly parasites)! ï¿½ but ï¿½soak the richï¿½ taxation is always aimed at destroying the former and protecting the latter. (4 hours 48 minutes)

Check-ins begin around the 14 minute mark.

Remember that you can receive the Liberty Net on the nearest clear frequency to 3950 kHz every Saturday night at 10PM Eastern Time, or listen live on the Internet via N2SAG or N2IRJ. You can also listen at your leisure ï¿½ on your computer or mp3 player ï¿½ via the downloadable audio files posted right here at http://3950.net every week.

Once again, thanks to W1WCR for his excellent work as Net Control Station, and to N2IRJ for his superb receiving and recording efforts.

Thanks for this.

Hmm - are these practice tests typical? I just took several of the technician tests and passed with flying colors, no study at all. I can only assume that they are easy. I cannot see why any radio person would be concerned about these tests.

I tried two General tests, but missed because of shortcomings in my knowledge of a few of the most technical equipment and computer-related terms. I would guess a couple hours' study of the manual would fix that problem.

The high, (boy), mayor of Pittsburgh, always has his hand out to the state and the fed. with all the snow we had here a bit back, everyone's budget is in the crapper. i'm 35 miles east of Pgh. we got about 6 to 8 inches of water in our snow pack. east of me, in the ridges, they got 10 to 14 inches of water in their, now melting snow pack. the 4 large rivers, in western PA, all go through the berg. so, with warm weather, and 2 to 4 inches of rain forcast, looks to be our usual St. Patties Day flood here. near my little town, "Brush Creek", is now "Brush River". it has doubled and tripled it's size over the last 2 days. more rain and melting run-off, and the people living in the low-lands will be getting their feet wet again. BTW, there is about a dozen Penns Woods in the state. stay dry down there and watch out for them twisters.

Those tests are the actual questions. When you take the actual test, you might get a different mix, but if you can reliably pass every practice test, you'll do great on the real one.

Yes, that's correct. Every night, although once in awhile they are AWOL for some reason. At the end of this segment (0659) they switch immediately over to 31 meters and carry on there. Here on the U.S. west coast, generally excellent signal.

An alliance between the Marxist Left and Jihad Islam - known as the Red-Green Alliance - is on the march.

Israel is not the only target of the Red-Green alliance. Its operations span the globe. In Nigeria on Sunday night (3/07), the Jihadists led the charge. With the apparent collaboration of the Moslem-dominated Nigerian army, Moslem gangs entered three predominantly Christian villages around the city of Jos and killed innocent civilians, including children with machetes, axes, and daggers.

The worldwide leftist media ignored the atrocity - or said it had nothing to do with religion. And while this was going on, Joe Biden was in Israel -- and promptly showed where the Obama administration's true sympathies lay: with the Red-Green Alliance.

Bill O'Reilly slammed the "birther" story on his show, saying that he had investigated the theory last year and debunked it.
In his "Talking Points Memo" segment. O'Reilly said:

"That theory has been around for a while. The Factor investigated, found out it's bogus. We found out that President Obama was born in Hawaii.. we were sent the documents. And what are you gonna do? I don't know why it's still around..."

Gosh Billo the clown is on FOX News so it must be true right? And he says he is always "looking out for the folks" so it must be true right? Right? I mean it is FOX NEWS, you know "FAIR and BALANCED" and all that noble stuff.

The self described "rodeo clown" now demands his devoted lemmings to "leave your Church" if it so much as mentions the words social justice or economic justice. They are "secret code words" Beck breathlessly pontificates and "were the one common rallying cry of both Nazis and Communists because they both want totalitarian government".

I have always suspected Mrs.Taylor down the street was up to no good volunteering at that soup kitchen. And Mrs. Schmidt always helping out at that homeless shelter, very suspicious. Now I know they are both dirty COMMIES! Wait, Schmidt is German so she must be a NAZI. Oops...I hope he doesn't find out about me sending money to that group of doctors and nurses that provides free medical care for the indigent...GULP I didn't know they were filthy commies! Honest I didn't!!

Thanks for the warning Glenn. Being the devout Mormon you are I'm wondering if you were wearing your "magic underwear" when issuing your encyclical? I know that you as a Mormon believe that Jesus is the offspring of an alien being who came to earth and f*d Mary when she was 12 years old and black people have no souls etc.etc. etc. but that doesn't undermine your credibility at all. After all, you are radio and television star and they wouldn't put you on if you lied right? Not in the United States of America anyway.

Your allotted "15 minutes of fame" ended about 15 years ago and your schtick has finally "jumped the shark" so please make the world a better place and kill yourself. I mean this in a good way.

"iBiquity's Royalty Will Adverstly Affect Minority-Owned Stations"

"The royalty concept proposed by iBiquity will force small minority stations out of business and their stations would eventually fall into the hands of Clear Channel, ABC/Disney, Emmis, Bonneville, Cox and Radio One. Of course, these corporations have disclosed that they have a vested interest in iBiquity. REC feels that the proposed royalty rates by the broadcaster-backed iBiquity is strictly a ploy to drive the remaining independent minority broadcasters out of business and the megacasters like Clear Channel, et al will benefit from the royalty fees paid by these minority stations... REC questions the legality of the iBiquity royalty scheme if the proprietary iBiquity system is chosen as the standard for DAB."

http://www.recnet.com/fcc/99-325-0402.pdf

Just as with a particular poster, here, who assumes that just because someone presents himself visually as mentally challenged, even though that person can express himself very well with the written hand, these IBLOCK bigots are trying to put minority-owned broadcasters out of business. With many direct visits from the Texas Criminal Defense Lawyers Association (TCDLA), perhaps there is a class-action suit looming against the iBquity/NPR/NAB/FCC incestuous associations.

Mr Bigot said:

The royalties and hardware upgrades are designed to be too expensive, driving minority-owned stations out of business. Nice try at a twist of words, Mr. Bigot. Perhaps, Harris should be included in the class-action suit.

It's common knowledge that Billo the Clown is a CIA errand boy but I didn't know this about him.

"O'Reilly has been fingered and linked to attending an underage female prostitution whorehouse in Panama in the 1970s. O'Reilly, who was masquerading as a journalist reporting on the sale of the U.S. Panama Canal, has been fingered attending a teenage Panamanian whorehouse on at least eight (8) occasions where CIA asset O'Reilly engaged in sex with 14 and 15-year old Panamanian teenage girls." "HD Radio: Doomed from the Start"

"HD Radio was not only doomed from the start, it was such a serious blunder that it may well lead to the death of thousands of radio stations and the permanent stunting of the industry itself... Why did this happen?.. They didn’t want the 10-Watt student station to suddenly have an equal signal to theirs... And the money-men didn’t want dozens of new independent channels to be available to listeners... But IBOC gave the money-men the one thing they wanted most of all: It preserves the inferiority of the smaller broadcasters. In fact, amid a sea of IBOC hash from the big boys, it accentuates their inferiority. The end result of this shortsightedness will be bankruptcy for many stations, fewer and poorer choices for the listeners as conglomerates gobble up the remains."

http://3950.net/2009/12/hd-radio-doomed-from-the-start/

The IBLOCK bigots are maginalizing minority-owned stations through their jamming with IBLOCK hash, Mr. Bigot.

And I should add that Mrs. Manning (Archie's wife) is a very nice lady and did a fantastic job raising all their children. Archie is a very successful business man, he made much more money in business and investments than he did playing football. And these are the facts of the Manning matter.

Lithium Ion as we know it is about 3.6V anyway.

Most types of Lithium cells are between 3V and 3.7V.

It's only the Lithium/Iron Disulfide type that's around 1.5V (actually about 1.7V to 1.8V when new).
And AFAIK there isn't a recharable equivalent.

Ah - then you may count yourself somewhat fortunate to have heard RNZI. From what I understand, it is usually a nonstarter for east coast NA folks.

My guess - and it is only a guess - is that this frequency could become slightly better by summer. I find that higher freqs often persist later in the evening as the nights become shorter.

Now, there's a station that we Westcoasters have a tough time with.
We often get a carrier, sometimes nice and strong, but the modulation is weak and often inaudible.

I like Lithium batteries just for the convenience. They last a LOT longer than alkalines, and in fact I have some frequent-use devices with Lithiums that have not needed a battery change for almost half a decade. Some GMRS 1.5-watt walkie talkies, for example - I use them a bunch in the summer, and they just keep on ticking. Also in bicycle lights, etc. Well worth the price differential.

I wish they were readily available in C and D sizes.

Followup - the QRM cochannel turned out to be VoRussia, which quickly overtook Iran shortly after the last post. Usually VoR is solid on this channel, but today Iran squeaked in just for a few...Oh, well - might have been a once-in-a-life chance...

The VOA English relay via Botswana on 9,885 kHz, 0300-0430z was a potent signal here on the U.S. West Coast on 15 March 2010. SINPO = 44534. 100% easy copy. Slight adjacent channel utility QRM, but no biggie. At changeover to Madagascar at 0430z, signal dropped precipitously. Audio there but <10% copy at that point.

Hi,

Thanks for help.
I always seem to have uncertainties re modes.

This Tiscom CG stuff is not something I've heard recently.

Just trying to clean-up an old freq. database that I have, and noticed that I had them down as LSB, which seemed incorrect, probably, to me ?

Best regards,
Bob

Thanks Bruce. trouble is, those made-in-japan filter's were used in a number of receivers from the 60s to the early 90s. which years are bad, i have no info. and, how many radio manufactures used them with their own name on them. so, for guys like me, who collect, it could turn into a nightmare. BTW, the 515 is a super receiver. i play with the stock one a few hours a week. vary quiet receiver. i have the whole JRC run in my collection, except the "505". less than 800 made, and super hard to find. the last one that popped up went for over $3k. much more than i want to pay. enjoy your receiver.

This same broadcast tonight was excellent copy, starting a little rough at 0300 but becoming easy armchair by 0345, thereafter excellent with only occasional utility QRM on the lower side (USB wiped it clean). Even after the 0430 switch to Madagascar, the signal was still quite readable if not powerful - propagation and noise was bordering on excellent, and Mad was much better than last night. I did a Botswana reception report, and would have done a Madagascar report except my scribbling hand got tired.

I want something simple to make.
I'm thinking of better antenna(s) for the RCA superradio and a couple portable SW radios I have {-the RCA gets stations just fine, it mainly needs fine-tuning help-}.

I did make a simple passive tuned loop for the SW out of a single turn of copper grounding rod and a AM radio tuner cap. Worked much better than the included antennas, but was 4 ft wide and not built real sturdy.

If I do loops I want these to be smaller, maybe 1.5 or 2ft across so I can move them around and use them indoors easily.

There is also the 13.5" stormwise monster ferrite sticks. They would be more compact than a loop, but for a small MW/SW recieving antenna, are these going to receive significantly better?

Hello Doug,

A ferrite of about 13" will not perform better then a well designed 1.5 .. 2 ft diameter loop.

As long as you can get the loop into resonance and include some matching (inductive coupling loop or coupling with a ferrite core), noise will very likely be dominated by external noise (instead of receiver noise).

When you experience that noise from the antenna is far above the receiver's noise floor, you can reduce the size of the loop.

Instead of reducing the size of the loop, you may increase the coupling between the receiver and the loop. This will reduce both signal and noise output, but increases the bandwidth somewhat, so tuning is easier.

Good luck with the experiments!

Ah, but Howard Beale was fictitious; Glenn Beck is, at least insofar as he holds forth on a bona fide news channel with other great

I have to say, I have not had this problem. I usually see the device begin to slow or dim or whatever it would normally do. It may be only a half an hour 'til electron death, but it is not instantaneous, and that's plenty of time for anything I use.

This was so excellent last night at this time that I may try for a SS-Language QSL tonight. A good music program commenced at 0500 with distinctive songs, and even after RHC started up with their splatter 10 kHz down, it was easy to clean up with USB and notch.

Hello,

I'm mainly a sw listener, Sr. Citizen now, and frankly not very knowledgeable about radio theory.

Have a new WinRadio receiver that I'm enjoying very much.

But I realize there are several optional settings that I really don't understand, and don't have a handle on.

I do listening from about 1 MHz up thru the vhf/uhf scanner freq's, including MIL and Maritime stuff on SSB.

Regarding the IF Bandwidth options:

Might someone please give me a short discourse on what this does, and what it effects.

And, some suggested (Default) settings that I could get started with for:

AM

Also the effect of slow, medium and fast for what I think is the the AF Filter

Thank you very much; appreciate the help,
Bob

The IF bandwidth is how wide (in frequency) a signal you want to receive. Filters have shapes, or more acurately, if you plotted the response of the filter, it's going to be better at one frequency (the center) and as you go away from it (up or down) the response curve will have a shape.

Narrow filters look like an upside down letter U, with a sharp cutoff, wide filters have a long curve of the sides. Narrow filters are more expensive and have other characteristics.

Then there is the bandwidth of the filter. Those terms only really work in context, for example a wide filter for AM is 6khz "wide", for SSB 3kHz and for CW 1kHz.

For example, if you were listening to an AM shortwave station with little noise and no nearby stations, you would want a 6kHz filter with a wide response. As the band gets more crowded, you would want one with a narrower frequency response, though at around 3kHz it starts to become difficult to understand them (like an old digital cell phone) and by 2 almost impossible.

The narrower a filter is, the more sounds become odd going through it, a phenomenon known as "ringing". So if you have a choice or adjustment, you want the widest filter bandwidth with the widest response curve that blocks out enough interference and noise to understand the station.

Got that? Read it over a few times, it's difficult to understand, and I'm not a great teacher.

The same principal applies to SSB (single side band), except that SSB only has have of the wave, (top or bottom) and you can filter out the side you don't want. So a 3kHz SSB filter is like a 6kHz AM filter. Generally SSB filters start at 2.4kHz and become narrower.

CW is just a switched carrier, on and off, so a narrow filter (250Hz) is fine. Since at that narrow a filter you get lots of ringing, and other effects, it becomes difficult to listen to. To make listening easier, you want as wide a filter as possible.

Hams and commerical radio operators before WWII were trained to copy with wide filters and to be able to pick out the one signal in may nearby ones intended for them. As good IF filtering became available during WWII it became less of a technological requirement, but until the turn of the century when digital signal processing at the IF became reasonably available, many hams did without it.

Many hams still use relatively wide (2-3kHz) filtering for CW because they are used to it, or it's cheap and simple.

> And, some suggested (Default) settings that I could get started with for:
> AM

AM (amplitude modulation) is the traditional way of adding voice to a signal. The AM broadcast band in the US is 530kHz to 1750kHz, and scattered through out the shortwave broadcast bands are mostly AM stations. There are a handful transmitting in USB or digital radio, but almost everything you will hear is AM.

Sort range (air/ground to tower, etc) avation is on 108-130(?) mHz and is AM.

> NFM

Narrow band FM. Wide band FM is used for broadcasts, such as the US FM band (88-108 mHz) and analog TV (which is almost dead in the US).

NBFM is (aka NFM) is used for communications. You won't hear any below 26 mHz.

There you may hear remote to studio links for radio stations, illegal "freebanders", CB operators (FM is illegal in the US on CB) and from 29.5 to 29.7 mHz FM is used by hams.

Over 30 mHz, there are commercial, millitary, government and hams using FM. Ham bands to listen for are 50-54, 144-148, 223-225,430-450 mHz and so on.

Short range boats use a band around 165 mHz, there are also weather forecasts near there.

> LSB
> USB

Upper and lower sideband. This is used for longer range communications than AM can provide. Everyone uses USB, ships, airplanes, hams, commercial, millitary and government etc on HF. Hams and military aircraft use it on VHF and UHF.

LSB (lower side band) is pretty much only used by hams and only below 10mHz.

Either when not tuned in properly gives you that quacking sound like the attack scene in star wars.

Note that hams are not required to use either USB or LSB on an particular band (except for the 5mHz band in the US). It's more convention than anything else. Occasionaly you will hear a ham using a military or marine (boat) radio that is only USB below 10mHz.

> Also the effect of slow, medium and fast for what I think is
> the the AF Filter

No, it's the AGC (automatic gain control) time. The AGC adjusts how loud the signal sounds, although it usually works in the IF. In the IF it adjusts how well it is received in relation to the internal noise of the receiver. Stronger signals can be received with less gain, so the receiver generates less internal noise. Weaker ones require more gain, which means more noise.

Fast medium and slow determine how quickly it "resets". For voice you don't need much of a delay, so a fast delay is desireable. Morse code has lots of gaps in it, so a slow agc is prefered. Until you get used to it, leaving it on medium is a good start.

There is a good article by Dallas Lankford at http://www.kongsfjord.no/dl/Antennas/Loop%20Antenna%20Sensitivity.pdf comparing 6in., 1ft, and 2ft air core loops and a space magnet (ferrite core loop antenna).

I built a couple of loops. The one I kept is a 3 ft with 12 turns #12 across a dual 466pF (932pF var.capacitor) and 1 turn #12 for a pickup loop with 10 feet of RG58 coax giving a range of 400kHz to around 3.5MHz. I built it so it can be tilted but have never seen much benefit in doing that. FYI - I used #12 only because I had 1000 ft sitting in the garage.

Hi, Bob -

In terms of IF, Bandwidth describes the width of the slice of the frequency spectrum that gets through to your final RF stage, and also affects the width of the audio slice that reaches your speaker. It serves to determine both the audio quality (how much the of high freqs get cut off) and the amount of adjacent channel information is allowed to get through.

As an example - For SWL on AM, most stations are spaced about 5 kHz apart. That means one on 9,555, one on 9,560, one on 9,565 and so forth. If you want to listen to a station on 9,560 and you don't want adjacent interference from those other freqs, the slice you take should be narrow enough to reject those adjacent signals but wide enough to provide a pleasing audio regime. In this case, a 6 kHz IF filter width (typical for a wide AM with good midrange tones) would be adequate, cutting off everything more than 3 kHz away on either side and leaving you with a clear channel. You would hear everything from 0 to 3,000 Hz audio, an adequate range for comfortable hearing and understanding.

If you run across a station closer than 5 kHz, you may want to narrow your filter a bit. If an offending station is on 9,558, you would have to take a narrower slice, and maybe use a filter that cuts off at 4 kHz width. You again get a clean signal, but the trade-off is that you lose some high audio frequencies. The desired signal gets a little bit harder to understand.

Lots of things can affect this, of course. If your filter has steep "skirts", meaning a good solid cutoff at each end, then they should work very well. If your filter has gentle skirts, they may not work as well as their bandwidth rating would suggest, allowing in some adjacent interference. I am not sure about the WinRadios, but if they have continuously variable bandwidths, you should be able to adjust the filter width so that the skirt quality will be slightly less important. Also, if the adjacent signal is very strong and your desired signal is weaker, even a decent filter may have a harder time rejecting the adjacent interference. In this case, a passband / IF shift adjustment can be handy - it can take the whole desired signal and essentially shove it away from the offending adjavcent interference. Again, I don't know if the WinRadios have this feature.

For AM SWL, good bandwidths are something nice and wide for strong signals on clear channels (6 kHz or more), a 6 kHz filter for general listening on a modestly crowded band, and a 3 - 4.5 KHz bandwidth for the modest signal next to the stornger station. If you get much narrower, you may lose a lot of audio and the sound becomes very muddy.

This is where SSB - USB - LSB can help. If you get interference from a station a few kHz away and the AM filter won't cut if out, a switch to the sideband farther away from the offending signal can make a big difference. In fact, using sideband for AM listening can help with a number of problems ranging from noise to fading. For USB / LSB, you can have narrower bandwidths, say 1.5 - 3 kHz, and still enjoy decent audio, because the slice you take is only half the incoming signal, and it can include everything from 0 up to the desired higher frequency.

The passband / IF shift can also help on USB / LSB, sliding your signal away from the interference. You will probably hear some variation in the sound of the SB signal, though, so it must be used judiciously.

Finally, if you have a REALLY close signal but you can use SSB, you can switch to that sideband farther from the offending signal and switch in a narrow filter. Howeve, you may still get a whistling heterodyne from the nearby station - in that case, switch in a Notch filter to cut it out, and adjust it is possible to achieve the desired level of whistle removal.

Does that help?

Bruce

BTW, slow/medium/fast is probably for the AGC (automatic gain control). This helps to make listening comfortable when you switch between tuning and listening, or with varying degrees of fading. Fast AGC for tuning and slow for listening usually works well; and if the fading is strong or rapid, your ability to adjust the AGC may help. AGC often works well in conjunction with the RF Gain control - at times of fading, pulling back the RF gain with AGC properly adjusted can reduce the effects noticeably. In fact, without the AGC the fluttering of the signal might drive you nuts! :-) Experiment and see what works best for you.

You could also check psychiatric facilities in the Holland, MI area in case he has been admitted for "observation".

Your concern for this very troubled individual is commendable. Hope this helps.

The upshot is that when a wireless mike using NiMH cells on live TV goes south, it screws up your TV show. That's reasonably relevant, I thought.

The transmitters have battery telegraphs. There is a bar graph on the receiver. Lithium batteries die quick. You have to change the batteries as soon as the bar graph starts to fall. Alkalines will give you another couple hours.

The life of the battery is more or less fixed. That is, it's a consistent drain, and so life of a given battery line from fully charged is the same unit to unit. You can count on the life of the battery being a more or less constant number of hours.

Keep track of the hours on a battery, replace it at 2/3's of life.

I used all wireless mics on all my live radio, TV, and stage shows. Never a problem with mics due to battery life.

I did notice some wireless mics were intermittent, from time to time. Traced that to a poor battery fit. Returned from Energizers to Duracells or ProCells and the problem never returned.

It's not just Radio, or Media. It's damned near category.
Consolidation has brought together another "Era of Good Stealing."

Make no mistake, I'm a capitalist. Fully developed. To the bone.
But consolidation is a strategy that will not lead us to "Wall Street."

It will take us to "Rollerball."

"Rollerball" describe a society that was run by corporate entities. And consolidation had ended in 5 corporations that ran everything. Each owning in it's category. Each category having been the result of category consolidation itself. And the corporate society runs everything. With no less a dictatorial hamfist than any governmental construct ever has, ever could. Tyranny is tyranny no matter where it comes from.

I was at Infinity when Telecom '96 was before Congress. And we all got form letters to sign and mail to our congresspersons written by someone at the company, stating the company line--actually Mel Karmazin's line--that multiple ownership within a single market is good for the industry. Making possible profitability for stations currently on the ragged edge, or just struggling to survive. And healthy stations makes for a healthy industry.

We were all instructed to sign these letters and mail them from our home post offices.

I went into the General Mangler's office and said that I objected to this mandate in the strongest possible terms. That this bill was an abortion. And that I understand Karmazin's reasoning. And that though his numbers looked promising, that there is only a 100 share in any market. And that profitability is a function of the revenue pool, and the number of entities fighting to share it. The only way these straggling stations can be made profitable, is through strategic consolidation of staff.

The GM said that simply isn't going to happen.

And yet, the numbers simply don't support the claim that making non profitable stations profitable can be done any other way.

I was told to sign the letter and mail it.

I said 'No.' I honestly thought he'd can me right then and there. Not that it would have been legal to do so. But that didn't stop him from standing at his door and telling the whole staff that any attempt to organize the station under AFTRA would be met with swift and irrevocable termination.

He was like that. Legalities were nuisances to be dealt with after the fact.

And within days of the signing of the Telecom bill into law, Infinity was sold by Karmazin to CBS and Karmazin took over CBS. And within 30 days, the first round of consolidation began. I had a sign in my office: Welcome to Rollerball.

I got so disgusted with the company that I walked out in late 1999.

By that time Clear Channel had absorbed Evergreen, Jacor and God knows how many other entities, and had been throwing some of the most talented people in the business into the street.

The freelance market became saturated with professionals trying to turn their talent into income. Clear Channel, went into the advertising agency business, and began to exploit the surfeit of talent by squeezing rates, and taking huge segments of the market in-house. One company, was now rewriting the rules for its own industry, and attempting to rewrite the rules for another.

Within a few months of my having exited CBS, I was contacted by stations all over the country. Even CBS stations. I turned them all down. When I declined a Clear Channel station, I got a call from a market mangler wanting to make his own pitch for bringing me on board. I told him I wasn't interested.

His words, "You'll regret that. We make the rules, Pal."

I think we're beyond the Gordon Gekko stage, here. We'd been on our way to a new era of robber barons until the financial sector collapsed. Again, a result of, among a number of other things, consolidation.

Rockefeller would have been proud.

I heard a discussion on XM, not too long ago, with analysts trying to describe what actually happened. One made a surprisingly good analogy.

Wall Street is very much like a high stakes poker game. No matter how long the game lasts, no matter who plays, or how well, there is never more money on the table than there was at the beginning of the evening. Minus what you hand out to the pizza boy. There is no new capital in the pot. Only clever and strategic maneuvering to capture more of the pot than the other guys at the table.

If the game lasts long enough, eventually everyone winds up losing, and the only one getting rich is the pizza boy, because he's the only one bringing fresh production to the people playing the game.

We've been sending out for Chinese for 30 years.

I'm not sure that the analogy holds up across the entire spectrum of business. But it does underscore that what we've needed for decades is to focus on, and OWN the engines of production, so there's always fresh asset moved into the pot.

We've not done that. We've had a 'stock price first' mentality. We've sold the production engines and their costs to other nations. Becoming an economy of buyers. Rather than expanding an economy of producers. We still manufacture here. But that production is owned by other nations. Nations that have built their own manufacturing plants on OUR soil. Used OUR labor, and OUR resources, but KEPT the engine of production to themselves. Which is where the REAL value is created. In other words, while we've been good little MBA's and sold off the expenses of production, and focused on owning stocks, THEY've sold off the costs of labor in their own country, and KEPT the means of production in ours.

And it was a strategic error for us to make that happen.

To be clear, I'm still a capitalist. Fully developed. To the bone. and I'm more convinced than ever that we can produce our way out of the malaise in which we find ourselves. But I do believe that Gordon Gekko was wrong. "Greed" doesn't work. In the short term. For those in the poker game. But in the long term, it only makes predators out of the players. Those who create nothing. Those who own. While it makes wealth for those who own the room.

And the pizza boy.

Sennheiser says Duracell/Procell isn't putting enough electrolyte in their batteries lately and sometimes the paste compacts and makes intermittent contact inside the battery.

I'll use Lithium for an actual 3 hour show, but for rehearsals, when mics stay on stage for 4 or 5 hours sometimes, I prefer the alkalines, so I don't have to interrupt an act in the middle of their rehearsal.
The less the truck sees of me the better.

Our pro stuff (Sennheiser and Shure) tells us the state of the transmitter battery on the receiver front panel.

I'm posting from rec radio cb. Somehow, I don't think they use CB radios at a transmitter station.

The upshot is that when a wireless mike using NiMH cells on live TV goes south, it screws up your TV show. That's reasonably relevant, I thought.

The transmitters have battery telegraphs. There is a bar graph on the receiver. Lithium batteries die quick. You have to change the batteries as soon as the bar graph starts to fall.
Alkalines will give you another couple hours.

Since most CB walkie talkies take 8 alkaline or 10 Nicads, I can easily imagine that. Would it be more useful to use a Replace at 2/3 sounds useful. You wouldn't want to be out on a hike, and have your CB go dead.

What do you do with the 1/3 charged batteries? Hope you don't leave them out on in the woods, or desert or something.

The life of the battery is more or less fixed. That is, it's a consistent drain, and so life of a given battery line from fully charged is the same unit to unit. You can count on the life of the battery being a more or less constant number of hours.

Keep track of the hours on a battery, replace it at 2/3's of life.

I used all wireless mics on all my live radio, TV, and stage shows. Never a problem with mics due to battery life.

I did notice some wireless mics were intermittent, from time to time. Traced that to a poor battery fit. Returned from Energizers to Duracells or ProCells and the problem never returned.

For those who are still interested in SWL ;-) I gave this station a listen from before 0450 when Turkey shuts off its 6020 transmission to 0530 when VoA - Greenville came on 6020 in French and virtually swamped it. Not being a competent Spanish speaker, I nonetheless copied down as many Spanish-language details of a virtual 40 minutes of sermon ('Gloria Gloria Gloria Dios, Aleluja Aleluja Aleluja' repeated at VERY high linguistic speed over and over and over) as I could. I will try to translate the "in-between stuff" into Spanish and shoot them a reception report, and see what happens. Too bad I did not grab that set of nice distinctive songs the night before - it would have been a lot easier to describe. SINPO varied from 13221 to as good as 35343 before VoA nearly killed it.

This season is different for this station than some past seasons - this year, for whatever reason, 6020 (6019.27) is virtually a "clear channel" during this time slot for R. Victoria. It's actually pretty nice. I wish I could still hear Quillabamba on 5025 - but R. Rebelde has now pretty much squashed it 24 hours a day.

No irony at all. I am a big fan of W. But he made some serious mistakes toward the end of his Presidency. The first bailout being one.

But, I'm a big fan of Business, too.

What concerns me is that the the administration previous to W, by changing the accounting laws, which permitted Enron and Worldcom, and by refusing to pass laws to protect the privacy of the individual citizens, except through highly convoluted and impossible to enforce 'opt out' mechanisms, and by creating the migration into investment by banks, and the migration into banking by insurance companies set the stage for the consolidation of banks and the ultimate toppling of Finance created a non-governmental system for gathering, collating and making available to government information that government is not, itself, permitted to gather by Constitutional provision. Creating the interchangeable overlords: Government. Or Business.

There's a reason why so many of these rules existed. What the previous administration to W realized is that by sidling up to business, and changing these rules, not only could fortunes be made, that would be beholden to the administration, but the side benefit would be the realization of the administration's dream of a massive database of personal, identifiable, and detailed information about every citizen, something that Clinton campaigned on as a necessity of reducing crime and aiding and abetting the police.

Of equal concern is the current administration's tight relationship with Google, the very epicenter of anti-privacy business.

No, not at all. They get pressed into other service requiring less instantaneous demand, until they're dead. Some alkalines can be recharged to 75% of new capacity. Those that can't are disposed of at recycling centers.

For the most part, I use NiMH cells in wireless devices. Replace at 2/3's charge service, and recharge.

LOL! NCIS, especially the Mark Harmon original series, is a great show - excellent characters, decent plots, good attitude towards military personnel.

As for me, I try - TRY, mind you - to like everyone, even when we disagree to some extent politically. I don't always succeed - people who refuse to actually think and prefer to mindlessly spout ideological sludge - whether liberal or conservative - drive me crazy.

Well, maybe...kinda...sorta...

Severe back pain can be very difficult to control. Furthermore, it is relatively easy to unwittingly get the monkey on your back. Just happens in the normal course of treatment. And if you are on other drugs (or alcohol -- as Lare was occasionally known to do), well, watch out! See my statement above about going to sleep and waking up dead. :-(

If that's the case, he needs to go to Pain Management and get an

He WAS going to a pain management clinic. Sometimes, they make you sign a contract not to use any other meds. I'm strictly reading between the lines here, but it almost sounds like the pain clinic dumped him for violating the contract...??? (just a guess)

I just had a 45 minute consult with a PM MD. He told me as long as there were no "safety" issues, he'll give me what I ask for (within reason). The last thing you want to do is fly off the handle. They could have been "testing" him.

Kind of lurid, but no moreso than most other stuff out there these days.

I don't think the real question is Who is Titus?, but rather, whether this seems like a LOT of unnecessary governmental tiddlywinks for an issue put to rest a LONG time ago. At least the FCC, after a long discourse, is being reasonable.

1) Not sure why they would be "testing him" -- or even what you mean by that.

2) From his post, it -appears-, for whatever reason, he had a falling out with his PM clinic.

3) It's fine that YOU have a good working relationship with YOUR pm doc in liberal California, but I would respectfully suggest that this is meaningless when applied to Lare and HIS doc in ultra-conservative Holland.

There was a CB-er, this is in the early 70's, in St Charles, Missouri, who used a highly modified Collins transmitter, with about 5kw output on the band. They called him "Echo" because he had a Echoplex on everything that he put into his rig. He transmitted music, sound effects. Harrassed truckers.

Charley came to town and that's all she wrote. I've got audio of him somewhere. Not pretty.

I had a walkie that would take alkalines or rechargeables.
Performance was the same when fully charged. But output was more uniform until death, lacking the slow decline of alkalines.

Rechargeable life was less than practical for long days in the field.

1) Strictly speaking, you are correct. It isn't "shortwave".

2) However, from a reality viewpoint, many do post their MW catches here.

So, catching, say, KGO in San Francisco while living in Northern Oregon would be considered a valid connection for a DXer?

I'm embarrassingly new at this and am trying to learn the ins and outs. I've made the above connection before, but didn't realize it was any big deal, KGO broadcasting at 50KW. I wasn't trying to score a long catch, jes hear a radio station I was very familiar with.

Because like I said, "shortwave" defines not the spectrum, but the listener. Someone who listens for hobby purposes, generally for the sake of the reception rather than the content. They had to figure out something to define name the group, and vague as it is, it's better than a lot of other choices. So it encompasses listing to FM broadcast band DX, and listening to AM broadcast band DX, and even "public service monitoring" though later there were groups created for that sort of listening.

Time was, most people got interesting in DXing because they simply tuned their bedside radio up and down the band at night, discovering what too many don't realize, that lots of distant stations can be received, and without any special equipment. That primed them, they wanted more, and they got better equipment and discovered shortwave listening.

Unless you take into account my haircut, which has such a short wave you can see your reflection in it, I guess I'm not a shortwave person. I remember lusting after a Hallicrafters S-120 as a kid and finally getting a used one when I was in the service stationed in N Africa. I could get hundreds of stations in Europe, but couldn't understand a word from a single one. Not my idea of entertainment.

I'm trying to get into ham cuz I want to talk to people, not see if I can hear them. I hear way too many people every day on my phone! I jes cancelled cable tv and talk radio is crap. You wanna carry on an intelligent conversation, I'm there. ;)

Well, at 50 kW, probably would not be considered 'rare' DX <grin>, but:
a) It's a start.
b) Whatever works for you.

My -personal- views are as follows...

If you are listening for actual content, it seems much more practical to listen on the internet. No interference (QRM), no static (QRN), no fading (QSB).

If you are listening to see how good of a 'catch' you can get and like/love the "magic" of radio, then SWLing is the way to go (even if it is medium wave [AM broadcast band], not shortwave).

I see from your other post, you want to get into ham radio.

Well, it's as easy as it has ever been: no Morse code (CW) required, study guides available for free on the internet and a passing score of just 75% required.

Good luck on getting your ticket!

Just my 2 cents, your mileage may vary.

They didn't have the internet as we know it 30 yrs ago. I do communicate via the net heavily. NNTP, IRC, IM, email, etc, but I'm a hopeless gadget freak and have wanted to be a ham since I was in jr high. While my buddy got his ticket, I was lured away by rock and roll, guitars, and high volume amps, so went down that road. Now, I'm a caregiver and stuck at home and am looking for more opportunities to talk to others.

I'm studying like crazy and enjoying it. I've got enough of a math and electronics background so that's no problem. But this radio frequencies and propagation and just all the terms is a chore. Plus, I'm learning code. I've always felt you're not a real ham unless you can cw. I'll get there. Thanks. ;)

The ARRL handbook has about everything in one volume.
You don't need the current version. ebay has some variety as to years.
Also, the Operating Manual has some good info on operating (duh) current info on their website.
I also have the antenna handbook and and older design handbook and I often use them. Well written, clear diagrams, and written by and for hams. I have a handbooks from the 50s, 60s, 1984 and 1995. You can easily see how the technology has evolved, but the basics are pretty much the same. I also have a VHF handbook, and a few others in a stack somewhere that I don't use as much.

KGO from northern OR isn't much of a catch. Anything past about an hour or so past sundown and you can hear them on a crystal set (much easier on even a pocket radio). Ditto for KFI, KFBK, KSL, KBOI, ad inf.

Strictly speaking medium wave listening isn't Shortwave. I recall snaking a little plastic transister radio into bed when I was about eight years old and listening to the Jean Sheperd radio show late in the PM with the radio under the pillow.
I was in Philadelphia and i heard WKBW from Buffalo NY. What that was something! I still listen to the radio but it is shortwave radio and I hear the radio signals from thousands of miles away and I don't have to sneak the radio into the sack.just wear a headphone so I don't keep my wife awake with the noise.

Liberty Net for Week of March 13-20

http://3950.net/2010/03/liberty-net-for-week-of-march-13-20/

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

JUST BEFORE this weekï¿½s Liberty Net, a very unusual wind storm in New Jersey ï¿½ characterized by brief but extremely powerful ï¿½micro-gustsï¿½ of wind ï¿½ caused extensive damage and protracted power loss; but N2IRJï¿½s generator saved the day, and the Net was able to be recorded as usual.

Here are a few of the highlights:

ï¿½ The post-storm power situation in Jackson, New Jersey was so bad that the police resorted to robo-calls to, apparently, all citizens, to let them know about the situation. (6 minutes)

ï¿½ The American Family Association (AFA) has made the bizarre demand that the orca that killed a trainer at Sea World should be ï¿½stoned to deathï¿½ in accordance with ï¿½scripture.ï¿½ (27 minutes)

ï¿½ An activist going by the name of ï¿½Splitting the Skyï¿½ attempted to make a citizenï¿½s arrest of George W. Bush for war crimes when the latter crossed into Canada. (29 minutes)

ï¿½ Why is our economic relationship with Japan being sabotaged by the controlled media? Will the hysteria drive us further into the arms of China? (45 minutes)

ï¿½ The owners of bad real estate mortgages are now starting to offer struggling homeowners cash buyouts to get them to vacate before legal foreclosure. (55 minutes)

ï¿½ Robert Rubin ï¿½ who set up the American economy for failure while in government service and then got a $100 million job with Citigroup to take advantage of the situation ï¿½ continues to economically pontificate (for pay, of course) in the controlled media. (1 hour 15 minutes)

ï¿½ Is there enough concrete in the country to build penitentiaries for all of Wall Streetï¿½s financial criminals, should they ever be brought to justice? (1 hour 18 minutes)

ï¿½ Is it to the Republicansï¿½ advantage to allow the monstrous ï¿½health careï¿½ bill to pass, so they can run against it next election? (1 hour 30 minutes)

ï¿½ Should the military be brought back from the pointless and tragic wars in the Middle East and be used to deport illegal aliens from California and other states? (1 hour 49 minutes)

ï¿½ Since more and more Americans are joining the underground economy where they donï¿½t pay taxes, governments are increasingly pushing for higher taxes on the only visible target left: property owners ï¿½ who may become victims to the extent that millions lose their homes. (1 hour 52 minutes)

ï¿½ Is our increasing global ï¿½interdependenceï¿½ seriously stifling creativity ï¿½ and does it make us more vulnerable to natural disasters? (2 hours 2 minutes)

ï¿½ We hear a detailed discussion of the governmentï¿½s efforts to force Vic, W1WCR (Net Control Station for the Liberty Net) to answer intrusive and unconstitutional questions from the Census department. (2 hours 40 minutes)

This weekï¿½s Net was helped by good propagation, though an inebriated jammer did try to take over the frequency after the Net had officially closed, causing intentional interference to some Liberty Net participants who were still having a conversation. The jammer, who thought he was anonymous, slunk away when a local amateur identified him by call sign and name.

Check-ins begin at the start of the recording. You can listen to the Liberty Net every Saturday night on or around 3950 kHz (usually within 10 kHz) at 10PM Eastern Time.

My personal thanks go out to all of those who make the Net what it is, especially W1WCR, N2SAG, and N2IRJ.

Just got an e-mail from Steve. He's definitely working on his pain issue. But there's another wrinkle that's caused his silence:
His ISP dropped USENet. So, he's looking for alternates.

He's still kicking, and as usual, raising dust.

He'll be back, bright and shiney, as soon as he gets a new news server configured.

That's how it starts...

Can you get KGO in the daytime? That would be more impressive at that distance.

Another example of stupid broadcasters which have bought the crap about the Internet being a REPLACEMENT for better options drinking the Kool Aid. They read "better" but all they care about is "cheaper" at the expense of audience and service. I'll wager it's more a decision based on audience restriction and identifying who is listening.

They are kidding themselves. Even on so-called "high speed" they're deluding themselves by calling it "streaming audio." There is nothing "streaming" about it. It's slow and inconsistent in feed. Just like the stupid digital TV system they forced on us to get us to buy new TV sets. (How do you like those frozen frames and white pixels all the time?)

Portability. Non existent.

Privacy? Hah! Wait until Internet #2 gets cranked up and the dark sinister shadows that control EVERYTHING decide they don't want us to hear what Radio Sweden has to say; it'll be shut off pronto. (And don't kid yourselves...at the rate we are gong around the world pissing off nations, Sweden's time will come).

Thankfully there are many other options and Radio Sweden can go to hell as far as I am concerned. Sweden once was considered a nation of freedom and without oppression. They're now also showing their government's real agenda with surveillance and prohibiting their citizens from freedom of speech. The creeps that run Sweden want the same things that the creeps who run other oppressive countries now want.

Good DX.

You and I are going to have to disagree. The new TV sets and digital system, for all its bells and whistles, do not provide a greatly improved view IMHO. Certainly not worth the trouble and expense. On top of that, the greater selection of channels = greater selection of crapola. TV has become a rare passtime in my house, and eventually I can see it disappearing from my life. The world is full of better things to do.

In my experience, DSP is overrated as a DXing aid, though not as a source of relief from listening fatigue. On the other hand, a simple phasing unit (like the Timewave ANC-4 or MFJ counterpart) will get rid of lots of the offending noise BEFORE it hits your receiver, and that does help.

Agree with the latter, but I have decent, if not overwhelming, luck with the former. The DSP on my R75 definitely makes the difference in being able to understand vs. not understand what an OM/YL is saying on a weaker station. On the strongest stations, it has no effect at all I can hear.

The ANC/MFJ devices are fabulous - one noise at a time. Of course, nothing beats a quite RF environment.

I would suggest a better way - do three things:

1 - Change your online handle. Your call sign is a magnet for persecutors, and will be forever. A new handle will be a new persona as far as the interent and search engines are concerned.
2 - When you post, use complete sentences and good grammar. It makes a difference when putting off obnoxious people and exalting your own position.
3 - Completely, utterly keep your own house clean. If you take the perpetual high road, then every thing they say will be the low road, and it will be their oafishness that will show up as long as Google keeps the search engines on these groups alive. Never threaten, never challenge, and remain on-topic. Don't even respond to this post, or any post, unless it contains an viable topic in which have interest.

I wish you, and everybody, well - but as long as you are in the eye of the hurricane, fair or not, the burden of resolution falls on your shoulders.

I'm done.

73,
Bruce Jensen

try to folloew YOUR own rules before trying to push them onto someone else

honestly don't we have enough people trying to tell us what to do and what to say as it is when you post as you just have you feed the trolls what they wanted

YOU are as much or more of the problem than I thereby

Well they were using synchronous detectors back in the early sixties, it helped to pick out signals from under the noise.

They have a certain advantage, they schedule and can even sync things up, so it's not the act of random reception.

My first exposure to Jean, a true visionary, was Mad Magazine. It can still be found on the web:

http://www.keyflux.com/shep/madtxt.htm

Later, I discovered his hilarious short stories in Playboy --yes! I really did read the articles (sometimes ;). Playboy ran many of them over the years. Later, I got his books from my library. Wish he'd been syndicated, as I never heard his radio show. I also was unaware he was an avid ham.

Was the "....Dago Bomb That Struck Back" about the runaway fireworks on the 4th of July? It's been a long time.

A mighty good question, and (along with sheer lack of space) the reason why I have not invested in a second such unit. Further, I wonder - at least on the MFJ -

* Is it better, with two, to have one upstream of the other on the regular antenna side or the noise antenna side? (Probably the noise side, since this side can be preamped a bit to balance the insertion loss effect)...

* If you had THREE of these beasties, would it be better to have them in straight series, or stack two side-by-side upstream of the third?
(I'd guess the latter, also to balance the insertion loss effect).
Either way would require 4 antennas minimum.

There was one fellow here a few years back that stacked several ANCs up, reportedly to good effect. I wish I had room for an antenna farm...

>From Tad Cook, K7RA

To all radio amateurs

SB PROP ARL ARLP011
ARLP011 Propagation de K7RA

On March 6-9 we got a taste of the bad old days from 2008-2009, when there were frequent stretches of zero sunspots. After March 9, activity picked up, and we hope there is no end in sight to the much-welcome sunspots.

This week, March 11-17, average daily sunspot numbers increased from the previous period from 12.4 to 29.4. Thursday March 18 had a repeat of Wednesday's sunspot number, 28. We've looked at various moving averages over the past few years to try to smooth out the bumps and spot trends, and another way to look at it would be the trailing 50-day average of daily sunspot numbers, which on March 18 was 27.34. The fifty day period is purely arbitrary. For the eighteenth of each month, going back to April 18, 2009 the trailing 50 day average was 0.48, 2.44, 5.42, 7.4, 3.14, 0.48, 4.42, 7.42, 8.98, 17.44, 26.12 and 27.34. We can see a positive trend there.

On March 11 new sunspot group 1055 emerged, which followed the arrival of group 1054 the day prior. 1055 lasted a very brief period, and group 1056 appeared March 17. Today group 1054 is fading over the western limb, and it is hard to tell from the STEREO mission if some of the active magnetic areas just over the horizon are new or returning sunspots, or not even fully formed sunspots at all. One uncertain area looks to be a day or less away, and beyond that, the only thing visible is on the other side of the narrowing unseen area on our Sun's far side. At 1045z Friday morning that blind spot covers less than 11.7% of the Sun's total area.

So far in March the average daily sunspot number is 24.2. For all of every month of March since the end of the last century, the average (1999-2009) was 100.5, 203.6, 166.7, 154.3, 119.7, 81, 41, 21.3, 9.8, 15.9, and 0.77. Sobering, isn't it?

The Vernal Equinox, marking the beginning of Spring in the Northern Hemisphere and Fall south of the equator occurs tomorrow, March 20 at 1732z, 10:32 AM West Coast Pacific Daylight Time, or 1:32 PM EDT. The weeks prior to and following both the Vernal and Autumnal Equinox are favorable to HF propagation.

The latest forecast from Thursday's reading by NOAA and the U.S. Air Force show solar flux remaining in the mid-eighties for the next week, and planetary A index staying around five, until a brief increase to six on March 28-29. Geophysical Institute Prague sees quiet conditions for all of March 19-25.

A few comments this week from readers:

"I am fortunate to have #1 DXCC but in recent years have concentrated on 6 meters and the low bands, with lots needed on 17m and above. The last month has shown a great improvement in my new ones, with one on 17m, 3 on 15m, 13 on 12m and two new ones on 10m (5N and IS0). Lots more to go for this OT. 73, Pat, W5OZI."

Mark Lunday, WD4ELG Greensboro, NC - FM06be, wrote, "0300 UTC on 15 Mar, 2 hours after local sunset, I worked ZK3YA and FO8RZ on 12 meters. Makes me wonder if the activity is as much a function of the perception of conditions (which makes amateurs go on the higher bands) as opposed to the conditions themselves. It's not THAT far into the cycle yet, but everyone is itching to get on 15, 12, and 10 meters."

W3HKK in Johnstown, Ohio wrote, "Tuning around on 160 the evening of March 14 showed exceptionally strong SSB signals into Ohio from Virginia and the Carolinas, with very low band noise. Didn't think much of it until the next morning at 1045z when I again heard booming SSB signals from the early morning 160 meter crowd. So I tuned down to CW, and low and behold heard KL7RA (Kenai, Alaska) calling CQ, and then a sked in 9 land, for over half an hour, working assorted east coast stations along the way. His signals were a solid 569. Not many takers but he was there to be had."

A note before closing, in case anyone is confused, when we say 1030z that is the same as 1030 UTC or 1030 Greenwich Mean Time. It is also the same as 3:30 AM Pacific Daylight Time or 6:30 AM Eastern Daylight Time.

Sunspot numbers for March 11 through 17 were 31, 36, 32, 30, 28, 21, and 28 with a mean of 29.4. 10.7 cm flux was 84.2, 89.6, 91.8, 89.4, 86.4, 85.2, and 86.7 with a mean of 87.6. Estimated planetary A indices were 9, 9, 4, 6, 3, 4 and 7 with a mean of 6. Estimated mid-latitude A indices were 9, 6, 2, 2, 2, 3 and 5 with a mean of 4.1.

Stealing from the wounded troops and children of those killed in combat. Back in the day when the broadcasting industry had a modicum of standards this would be a career ender. But in today's world he'll be made out to be a "victim", watch and see.

Isn't it interesting how none of those cluster FAUX gas bags (Hannity, O'Reilly, Beck, et. al.) who wrap themselves in the flag never served one day in the military. Nor have Limbaugh, Levine, Carlson, Gallagher, and the rest of the flag waving errand boys who've made radio unlistenable.

And the answer to the question posed in the subject heading is? Very peacefully. Just as every sociopath does, they have no conscience to trouble them when they are alone with their thoughts.

I'm running a 6v 300ma adapter to run my Sangean ATS800 radio. I was wondering if applying a couple of ferrite chocks like this to the DC power cord would eliminate any humming noise created by the adapter.

http://www.piurl.com/p/22mW

The humm is not very loud, but it's noticeable. I know batteries are the best solution, but in this case it's more convenient to use the adapter.

==========

I got the TDK 5mm ferrite core RFI EMI filters a couple of days ago and they worked out very well. The humming noise from my wall wart is no longer noticeable.

I also applied them to the audio cable going from the PC sound card to a FM transmitter. I had a small bit of hum being broadcast if the audio cable was positioned too closely to some other cables behind the PC case. Problem solved.

Obama's Guerrilla War on the Web

They have been called the “Fifty Cent Party,” the “red vests” and the “red vanguard.” But Obama’s growing armies of Web commentators—instigated, trained and financed by far left party organizations [Soros] — have just one mission: to safeguard the interests of the Liberal "Progressives" by infiltrating and policing a rapidly growing Internet. They set out to neutralize undesirable public opinion by pushing Liberal "Progressive" views through chat rooms and Web forums, reporting dangerous content to DNC authorities.

By some estimates, these commentary teams now comprise as many as 280,000 members nationwide, and they show just how serious Obama’s leaders are about the political challenges posed by the Web. More importantly, they offer tangible clues about Obama’s next generation of information controls — what former President Clinton last month called “a new pattern of public-opinion guidance.”

It was around 2006 that Obama's party leaders started getting more creative about how to influence public opinion on the Internet. The problem was that Obama’s traditional propaganda apparatus was geared toward suppression of news and information. This or that story, Web site or keyword could be blocked or filtered. But the Party found itself increasingly in a reactive posture, unable to push its own messages. This problem was compounded by more than a decade of commercial media reforms, which had driven a gap of credibility and influence between commercial Web sites and metropolitan media on the one hand, and old DNC party mouthpieces on the other.

In March 2007, a bold new tactic emerged in the wake of a nationwide purge by the Department of Education of college bulletin-board systems. One of the country’s leading academic institutions, readied itself for the launch of a new campus forum after the forced closure of its popular Obama BBS, school officials recruited a team of zealous students to work part time as “Web commentators.” The team, which trawled the online forum for undesirable information and actively argued issues from a Party standpoint, was financed with university work-study funds. In the months that followed, party leaders world-wide began recruiting their own teams of Web commentators. Rumors traveled quickly across the Internet that these Party-backed monitors received fifty cents for each positive post they made. The term Fifty Cent Party was born.

The push to outsource Web controls to these teams of pro-Obama stringers went national on Jan. 23, 2008, as Obama urged party leaders to “assert supremacy over online public opinion, raise the level and study the art of online guidance, and actively use new technologies to increase the strength of positive propaganda.” Sen. Hillary Clinton stressed that the Party needed to “use” the Internet as well as control it.

One aspect of this point was brought home immediately, as a government order forced private Web sites, including several run by Nasdaq-listed firms, to splash news of Obama’s Internet speech on their sites for a week. Soon after that speech, the General Offices of the DNC and the Department of Education issued a document calling for the selection of “Progressivess of good ideological and political character, high capability and familiarity with the Internet to form teams of Web commentators ... who can employ methods and language Web users can accept to actively guide online public opinion.”

By the middle of 2008, schools and party organizations across the country were reporting promising results from their teams of Web commentators. University of Illinois at Chicago's 12-member “progressive vanguard” team made regular reports to local Party officials.

Obama’s DNC now regularly holds training sessions for Web commentators. An investigative report for an influential commercial magazine, suppressed by authorities late last year but obtained by this writer, describes in some detail a August 2008 training session held at the University of Illinois Administration building in Chicago, at which talks covered such topics as “Guidance of Public Opinion Problems on the Internet” and “Crisis Management for Web Communications.”

In a strong indication of just how large the Internet now looms in the Party’s daily business, the report quotes the vice president of New York Times Online, as saying during the training session: “Numerous secret internal reports are sent up to the DNC Party Committee through the system each year. Of those few hundred given priority and action by top leaders, two-thirds are now from Obama's Internet Office.”

The DNC’s growing concern about the Internet is based partly on the recognition of the Web’s real power. Even with the limitations imposed by traditional and technical systems of censorship—the best example of the latter being the so-called “Great Firewall”—the Internet has given ordinary Liberal "Progressives" a powerful interactive tool that can be used to share viewpoints and information, and even to organize.

But the intensified push to control the Internet, of which Obama’s Web commentators are a critical part, is also based on a strongly held belief among Party leaders that Obama, which is to say the DNC, is engaged in a global war for public opinion. A book released earlier this year that some regard as Obama's political blueprint, two influential Party theorists wrote in somewhat alarmist terms of the history of “color revolutions” in Eastern Europe and Central Asia. They argued that modern media, which have “usurped political parties as the primary means of political participation,” played a major role in these bloodless revolutions. “The influence of the ruling party faces new challenges,” they wrote. “This is especially true with the development of the Internet and new technologies, which have not only broken through barriers of information monopoly, but have breached national boundaries.”

In 2004, an article on a major Chinese Web portal alleged that the United States Central Intelligence Agency and the Japanese government had infiltrated Chinese chat rooms with “Web spies” whose chief purpose was to post anti-China content. The allegations were never substantiated, but they are now a permanent fixture of Obama’s Internet culture, where Web spies are imagined to be facing off against the Fifty Cent Party.

Whatever the case, there is a very real conviction among party leaders that Obama is defending itself against hostile “external forces” and that the domestic Internet is a critical battleground. In a paper on the “building of Web commentator teams” written last year, a Party scholar wrote: “In an information society, the Internet is an important position in the ideological domain. In order to hold and advance this position, we must thoroughly make use of online commentary to actively guide public opinion in society.”

Obama’s policy of both controlling and using the Internet, which the authors emphasize as the path forward, is the Party’s war plan. Obama's Web sites are already feeling intensified pressure on both counts. “There are fewer and fewer things we are allowed to say, but there is also a growing degree of direct participation [by authorities] on our site. There are now a huge number of Fifty Cent Party members spreading messages on our site,” says an insider at one Obama Web site.

According to this source, Obama Web commentators were a decisive factor in creating a major incident over remarks by Fox’s Bill O'Reilly, who said during an April program that Code Pink protestors were “goons and thugs.” “Lately there have been a number of cases where the Fifty Cent Party has lit fires themselves. One of the most obvious was over Fox’s Bill O'Reilly. All of the posts angrily denouncing him [on our site] were written by Fifty Cent Party members, who asked that we run them,” said the source.

“Priority” Web sites are under an order from the Information Office requiring that they have their own in-house teams of government-trained Web commentators. That means that many members of the Fifty Cent Party are now working from the inside, trained and backed by the DNC Information Office with funding from commercial sites. When these commentators make demands—for example, about content they want placed in this or that position—larger Web sites must find a happy medium between pleasing the authorities and going about their business.

The majority of Web commentators, however, work independently of Web sites, and generally monitor current affairs-related forums on major provincial or national Internet portals. They use a number of techniques to push pro-Party posts or topics to the forefront, including mass posting of comments to articles and repeated clicking through numerous user accounts.

“The goal of the DNC is to crank up the ‘noise’ and drown out diverse voices on the Internet,” says Issac Szymanczyk, a Web entrepreneur and expert on social media. “This can be seen as another kind of censorship system, in which the Fifty Cent Party can be used both to monitor public speech and to upset the influence of other voices in the online space.”

Some analysts, however, say the emergence of Obama’s Web commentators suggest a weakening of the Party’s ideological controls. “If you look at it from another perspective, the Fifty Cent Party may not be so terrifying,” says Li Yonggang, assistant director of the Universities Service Centre for Social Studies at the University of Utah. “Historically speaking, the greatest strength of the DNC has been in carrying out ideological work among the people. Now, however, the notion of ‘doing ideological work’ has lost its luster. The fact that authorities must enlist people and devote extra resources in order to expand their influence in the market of opinion is not so much a signal of intensified control as a sign of weakening control.”

Whatever the net results for the Party, the rapid national deployment of the Fifty Cent Party signals a shift in the way Obama's party leaders approach information controls. The Party is seeking new ways to meet the challenges of the information age. And this is ultimately about more than just the Internet. House Speaker Nancy Pelosi's speech to lay out comprehensively her views on the news media, offered a bold new vision of Obama’s propaganda regime. Mrs. Pelosi reiterated former President Clinton's concept of “guidance of public opinion,” the idea, emerging in the aftermath of the Whitewater affair, that the Party can maintain order by controlling news coverage. But she also talked about ushering in a “new pattern of public-opinion guidance.”

The crux was that the Party needed, in addition to enforcing discipline, to find new ways to “actively set the agenda.” Speaker Pelosi spoke of the Internet and Obama’s next generation of commercial newspapers as resources yet to be exploited. “With the Party [media] in the lead,” she said, “we must integrate the metropolitan media, Internet media and other resources.”

Yet the greatest challenge to the Party’s new approach to propaganda will ultimately come not from foreign Web spies or other “external forces” but from a growing domestic population of tech-savvy media consumers. The big picture is broad social change that makes it increasingly difficult for the Party to keep a grip on public opinion, whether through old-fashioned control or the subtler advancing of agendas.

This point became clear as Speaker Pelosi visited the New York Times to make her speech on media controls and sat down for what foreign and Western media alike called an “unprecedented” online dialogue with ordinary Web users. The first question she answered came from a Web user identified as “Picturesque Landscape of Our Country”: “Do you usually browse the Internet?” he asked. “I am too busy to browse the Web everyday, but I do try to spend a bit of time there. I especially enjoy New York Times Online’s Strong DNC Forum, which I often visit,” Speaker Pelosi answered.

On the sidelines, the search engines were leaping into action. Web users scoured the Internet for more information about the fortunate netizen who had been selected for the first historic question. Before long the Web was riddled with posts reporting the results. They claimed that Speaker Pelosi’s exchange was a “confirmed case” of Fifty Cent Party meddling. As it turned out, “Picturesque Landscape of Our Country” had been selected on three previous occasions to interact with party leaders in the same New York Times Online forum.

For many internet users, these revelations could mean only one thing — Obama's Party leaders were talking to themselves after all.

Well, not exactly. When I go off to the woods it's for the solitude, the quiet, and a little deep DXing.

Hunting is not really my style, unless food is otherwise in short supply. Which it can be in January in the North Woods.

I've only had to kill what I eat a couple of times.

And I don't think they'll ever let me in that WalMart, again.

More than likely your hum is originating in a poor quality wall wart, so prevalent with the Chinese crap that has replaced once good-quality US made devices.

In lieu of exotic test equipment, take a VOM and set it to "AC." Measure how much AC voltage is leaking through your wall wart. If it's more than 10%, your wall wart is probably the source of the hum.

You can try toroids but that probably won't fix poor power supply filtering. I'd hit a few thrift stores and buy some other 6V 300 ma wall warts and experiment till the hum improves.

Ronald Reagon "private citizen" LOL... thanks for the belly laugh!

"Dutch" was the consummate SOCK PUPPET of the ruling elite. Just another of the endless stream of useful idiots used by the elite to manufacture "public opinion". Things really haven't changed much in the past 50 years, the CIA's OPERATION MOCKINGBIRD (control of the media) is not only alive and well today - it is thriving in dumbed down modern America.

From http://portland.indymedia.org/en/2004/03/284155.shtml
REAGAN AND CIA; OPERATION OCTOPUS

The commercialization of television, coinciding with Reagan's recruitment by the Crusade for Freedom, a CIA front, presented the intelligence world with unprecedented potential for sowing propaganda and even prying in the age of Big Brother. George Orwell glimpsed the possibilities when he installed omniscient video surveillance technology in 1948, a novel rechristened 1984 for the first edition published in the U.S. by Harcourt, Brace. Operation Octopus, according to federal files, was in full swing by 1948, a surveillance program that turned any television set with tubes into a broadcast transmitter. Agents of Octopus could pick up audio and visual images with the equipment as far as 25 miles away.

HALE BOGGS DISAPPEARED INVESTIGATING OPERATION OCTOPUS, DURING WATERGATE PROBE

Hale Boggs was investigating Operation Octopus at the time of his disappearance in the midst of the Watergate probe.

In 1952, at MCA, Actors' Guild president Ronald Reagan - a screen idol recruited by MOCKINGBIRD's Crusade for Freedom to raise funds for the resettlement of Nazis in the U.S., according to Loftus - signed a secret waiver of the conflict-of-interest rule with the mob-controlled studio, in effect granting it a labor monopoly on early television programming. In exchange, MCA made Reagan a part owner.

REAGAN: FBI INFORMER, REAGAN HAD AN FBI INFORMER'S CODE "T-10"

Furthermore, historian C. Vann Woodward, writing in the New York Times, in 1987, reported that Reagan had "fed the names of suspect people in his organization to the FBI secretly and regularly enough to be assigned 'an informer's code number, T-10.' His FBI file indicates intense collaboration with producers to 'purge' the industry of subversives."

The Heat is On: Congressman’s Office Says Constituent Calls Are ‘Harassment’
by Capitol Confidential

"Yesterday, I decided to call Rep. John Garamendi’s (CA-10) office in Washington, D.C. He’s my representative and I wanted to voice my opposition to the Senate Health Care Bill. I spoke with a female staffer and politely told her that, while I support health care reform, I oppose the Senate Bill because it wasn’t true “reform.” She said the Congressman thinks it’s a good bill and that he campaigned on health care reform. I told her I knew that. I also mentioned that I voted for him. When I tried to give her specific reasons why the Senate Bill would harm our system rather than reform it, she refused to listen. She said she was very busy and hung up on me. Being the persistent person that I am, I kept calling back. Each time I tried to finish my point, she hung up.

"I called one more time. This time she said, “If you call one more time, we will notify Capital Police.” I asked why my conduct warranted involving federal law enforcement agents. She said I was “harassing” her. I tried to explain that trying to convince a representative to change his or her vote didn’t constitute “harassment.” Before I could fully explain, she hung up again.

"I called back. This time, I asked to speak to her supervisor in order to report her repeated hanging up as well as the threat she made. I was placed on hold. Thinking I was holding for her supervisor, I was shocked when a Federal Agent with the Capital Police picked-up the telephone.

"At first, the Agent was curt with me. He claimed I was harassing Mr. Garamendi’s staff by continually calling after being told to stop calling. I asked him when it became a federal crime to lobby a congressman. He said that it wasn’t but it was a crime to “harass” congressional members and staff pursuant to 47 U.S.C. 223. I told him I was an attorney (which I am) and that I would research the statute he had cited.

"After researching 47 U.S.C. 223, I called Mr. Garamendi's office again and asked to be transferred back to the Capital Police Agent. The Agent picked up the phone and I explained to him that the statute he cited was not controlling since it only prohibits people from calling with the specific intent to harass. I further explained that I was simply trying to voice my concerns with the intent of getting Mr. Garamendi to change his mind, not to harass his staff. The Agent eventually agreed with my position and said he would call Mr. Garamendi's office and instruct his staff that I was within my rights to call my congressman and voice my concerns.

"After I hung up, I realized that this story should be told. Besides being an attorney, I've also had the privilege of serving this great country in the United States Marine Corps. Having seen the ugly legislative process the Senate Bill had been through, I saw this as not just another tactic to pass the Senate Bill at all costs, but also as an affront to our liberties.

"While I'm fortunate enough to be able to legally challenge what happened today, others aren't. The sad part is the democrats know this. They know that Americans unfamiliar with federal jurisprudence can easily be silenced when threats to involve federal agents are made. They know that most Americans don't want trouble and they'll go away rather than face the possibility of having to explain themselves to federal agents. That's why I found this tactic appalling, as a Marine, as an attorney and as a proud American.

"During my final contact with Mr. Garamendi's staff, it was confirmed to me that he would vote for the Senate Bill no matter what. I was told that I was wasting my time by calling. Mr. Garamendi is a junior member of the House of Representatives. He was just elected via a special election last November. He has made it clear that he is willing to forsake his constituents in order to please the Speaker of the House.

"Speaker Pelosi has said that she will stop at nothing to get the Senate Bill passed. She publicly stated that she would "pole vault over a wall" if barriers stood in her way. While that may be an amusing spectacle, it is indicative of what happened to me today. Apparently, threatening Americans with federal crimes to silence them is the latest tool in Speaker Pelosi's dirty bag of tricks.

"In the coming days, I'm sure more stories will develop illustrating the "win at all costs" tactics being employed by democrats. It's these tactics that have appalled a majority of Americans to the point that the Senate Bill has overwhelmingly been rejected by the American people. When we try to explain that to Speaker Pelosi's Caucus, we are threatened with criminal sanctions. We are told to shut up or face federal agents. Such treatment may be acceptable in the former Soviet Union, but it’s repulsive in the country I love and served. Is this hope and change? [It's Rope and Chains.]

The Secretary of the Treasury used the phrase "at war" last week, when describing his relationship with Wall Street. And you think I'm a radical?

Your ignorance -- and thus lack of credibility -- is showing (yet again).

No, ferrite chokes will not have any effect. The hum is probably due to either defective or insufficient filter capacitors in the wall wart. Replace (or add additional) filter capacitors to your existing wall wart, buy a better wall wart or make your own well filtered 6 volt power supply.

Last year, that democrap B HO ButtKisser who lives catty corner across the street from me, he broke my old Remington electric chainsaw.I had to show him at least eight times how to turn it on, (just like with many other electric tools/saws, hold that little side button in and mash the trigger) and I had to show him about five times how to keep the chain properly adjusted.He had said he is an old country boy (he is about sixty two years old) from Edwards (the little town of Edwards is about thirteen miles West of doggy's couch) and he knows all about chainsaws.When he brought my chainsaw back over to me, the chain was off of the bar and all snaggled up and a part that keeps the chain from flying off of the clutch was Broken! He Never, Ever has thanked me before whenever I had loaned him any of my tools.
Never Again!

Sheeeeeeeeeeeit, last year, he couldn't even find the oil drain plug on the bottom of his lawn mower.He pushed that lawn mower over here, he rattled my front screen door, he said,,, Show me where that drain plug is!

Why sure it is Bruce (for them), anyone who consistently - and I mean consistently - keeps spouting off about things that aren't going to change the course of events are IMO loose cannons.

Hey, none of us like the direction this country has been going for decades IMO. It is too far gone, there are no republicans, there are no democrats, there are no teabaggers. They ALL are in cahoots and it is something that could have been checked decades ago but it wasn't and alas it is too late now.

Mark it down, this country and the freedoms we have/used to have - are going to get smaller and smaller - and unemployment is going to get higher and higher - and what was once the greatest country in the world is going to be like the multitude.

All you can do as a head of household or if you're single - - is to try an cover yourself/family- the best you can and let the chips fall where they may. Just my take.

Well, Gregg, I guess I'm not quite this pessimistic (fancy that, coming from a dyed-in-the-wool pessimist and occasionally depressed-about-it person), but I do think it's going to get quite a bit worse afore it gets better...and getting better may take a long, long time.

3336. Removing RF and Noise from Apartment Areas

Hi,

I was wondering if anyone had any experiences in what one can do to remove the stray RF and noise that is caused by various electronics such as computers, TVs, and other electric and electronic devices. I live in an apartment and even on my Grundig 400 and Eton E5, E6 models, there is a significant noise level. I was wondering if anyone has any ideas that would work for removing such electronic hash through the receiver. I also have a Yaesu FRG 100B that I bought several years ago and wondering if there is something I can either buy that will take out the interference from the electronics. Im wondering if the cable modem and computers are a lot of the problem but I can only isolate them as far away as across the room.

Anyway, thanks for your help in advance.

There's a Timewave noise canceler that uses a polarity inverter and a sense antenna to remove local noise from your main antenna. People have varying degrees of success with them.

Agreed. Guess it's just another casualty of the dwindling SWL hobby, just like how there's very few tabletop receivers being made any more.

I've seen a couple of the Timewaves and was wondering if they were any good. I also saw that MFJ has some products somewhat the same. I was wondering if anyone had any good luck using toroids, chokes, etc for stuff like that as well. Im thinking that most of that stuff should be used on the power cords. Seems that my problem is varied electronic hash coming from the power lines and the computers and home electronics that are all around this area. Seems that when I can get the antenna outside the brick apartment building that I can get some pretty decent signals. Of course, having the apartment police watching everything and all the restrictions like that, Im looking for a way to enjoy my SWL stuff as well as getting my amateur radio station back online. Im thinking that a book by the ARRL on RFI EMI might help too.

Such a shame, I probably have had 10 or so of them over the last 15 or so years. Great publication. All thats really left for a new publication is World Radio Television Handbook. Then the monthly magazines such as Monitoring Times, PopComm, etc.

> World Radio Television Handbook. Then the monthly magazines such as > Monitoring Times, PopComm, etc.

Ah yes, the naysayers bad rapping the SWL hobby. Wish they'd go the hell back to their stupid ipods or Blackberry's or whatever other shiny things captivate them.

First, indeed it is sad that Passport has ceased operations. This was actually announced last summer so it is nothing new. Apparently it has more to do with the time its publisher wished to devote to it, according to one announcement on QRZ.COM. I don't know why a buyer for Passport was solicited but often ego plays a role. ("I started it. It was MY baby. No one else gets the credit." I am not saying this was the case but we've seen this happen in the last two years to two other prominent radio publications.

Secondly, back when shortwave was at its so-called "peak" (as defined by the boneheads to criticize it) THERE WAS ONLY ONE PUBLICATION FOR SWLs...World Radio TV Handbook! And it served us amply and well. You didn't hear the whiney victims and slit-eyed SWL critics jabbing and poking then like today but they were there just the same.

In the last 3 months we've gained a dozen new shortwave stations worldwide. We've seen incredible expansion of coverage of numerous existing stations. Radio Sweden has announced pulling back, not because of interest but because their Euro economy sucks. They are eliminating a lot of domestic service too. The same with the BBC that is part of a gasping and bleeding horrible economy. One entire BBC network is shutting down as is dozens of regional FM stations. Meanwhile Eton and Sangean's sales are increasing. Unfortunately there are no real quality US made shortwave receivers but that has more to do with the sinister creeps who are trying to destroy our country by sending all manufacturing elsewhere.

Apparently elsewhere they're not as simple-minded...and gullible... as we have become here.

I have excellent results with my MFJ-1026 - but it only works on one noise at a time, and it is essential that both antennas hear the same noise. This is not difficult in practice, but many people don't get this important point and have poor results.

We'll see how far those patriot tribunals really will get. Most of the so called patriots couldn't even get off the booze long enough to make it out

I'm thinking about getting the MFJ 1026 or perhaps the Timewave ANC 4. The 599 model by Timewave is a bit pricy and I would rather put that money into a new HF rig with some good DSP that or even an R 75. Wanting to modernize the shack a little bit.

Congratulations to Scotland for their hard fought 23 - 20 victory!

"Afternoon all, Josh Gardner here and I'll be guiding you through the second of this afternoon's Six Nations matches, Ireland v Scotland from Croke Park. As ever you can get in touch with us via Twitter, your thoughts are, of course, always welcome.

It's a familiar story for Ireland this afternoon, with the hope of a Grand Slam gone, they must content themselves with the consolation prize of a Triple Crown by beating the Scots today. Don't forget, there's also the outside chance of retaining the championship, should England pull off an upset at the Stade De France later on today.

The final impetus, and one that has been built up greatly over the last few days, is that after four years, Ireland are playing their final rugby game at the magnificent Croke Park. The atmosphere inside this cathedral of Gaelic sport has been incredible, and the Irish team will be desperate to end on a high before they move to the redeveloped Lansdowne Road (or the Aviva Stadium as it's going to be rather less excitingly known...).

Scotland on the other hand will be wondering what might have been. This might well have been the most frustrating tournament in recent memory - they've played well and should have beaten, Wales, Italy and England, last week, but instead there's a big fat donut in the win column and they need a win today to avoid the Wooden Spoon. It's a big ask for Andy Robinson's men, but they'll be so determined to give their efforts this tournament a proper ending.

16.51 The Irish team, led, of course by Brian O'Driscoll walk out onto the pitch and 80,000 voices roar in approval. There really is no place like Croke in all of sports, and while the Aviva Stadium looks like another stunning piece of engineering, with just 50,000 people there it just won't be the same will it?

16.55 We're just waiting for the anthems now, and I don't know about you, but I'm in a pretty good mood. Wales played like a professional rugby teams and not like a bunch of lads who'd one a drinking competition on St Mary's St to play rugby for Wales, and there's still two matches to go - great stuff.

That said, I'm hardly expecting a tryfest this afternoon given the way both teams have played recently. It's going to be physical, it's going to be brutal and it's going to be tight - it could come down to who is the most clinical with their chances.

16.58 The teams line up for the anthems, and those who've been following my commentaries over the tournament will be aware of my bugbear of the 'lineup mic' to hear all the players singing - it puts paid to the legend of Wales being a land of song I'll tell you that - but fair play to the Scots, they were mostly very tuneful - even the props!

16.59 John Hayes has his critics, and believe me, I'm often one of them, but no-one can doubt the man's passion and commitment to Ireland and how much he loves that green shirt, he's sung it over 100 times now and he looks as emotional as he did on his first cap

17.00 I would tell you about team changes, but both sides are in the rare position of being unchanges from last week, and we're about to get underway.

Dan Parks kicks long to get us started but Ireland secure it and set off with ball in hand up to the 10m line - nice early endeavour from the hosts there, looking to keep it in hand. Tommy Bowe comes off his wing and takes it at pace, he runs between the centres at halfway and looks to offloads to Earls, but he knocks it on. That could have been an early score there, Earls was in acres of space.
2

First scrum test for Ireland as they have an early put-in, they just hold on to it and Sexton takes it at first reciever, initiates the loop with D'Arcy, but the young fly-half knocks it on and fumbles. Dan Parks clears it and my, my what a kick, a full 70 metres and out at the 22.
3

Solid work at the lineout and it's mauled up a few metres before Sexton clears, he's pressured and it's partially charged down by de Luca, it falls into Earls' hands and he's on his own just inside the 22, but his offload to Best is knocked on. If Earls had got to his feet then he might have been away...

Ireland are penalised for an early hit at the scrum and Scotland take a tap and go, Barclay nearly bursts through inside the five but is smothered and we'll go back for a penalty in front of the posts, Paul O'Connell didn't release Ford before competing.
5 0 - 3

SImple chip from in front of the posts and Parks gives Scotland the lead. Worrying for Ireland though, they fell foul of the South African referee's interpretation at the breakdown, and they have again.
6

Earls takes a lovely late pass from Sexton just outside the Irish 22, he gets over the gain line and offloads to O'Connell, who bursts up to a few metres shy of the line, but Ireland knock on as they recycle.
7

Scotland win a free kick at the scrum, but Parks' clearance doesn't find touch - it could be dangerous but Murphy kicks it back and the fly half calls the mark.
8

The battle of the lineouts is going with the throw so far - O'Callaghan takes it off the top inside the Irish half and wilky soft hands from the backs finds Murphy in space on the left wing.
9

The ball is recycled and David Wallace bursts up the touchline with his electric pace but he's just in touch.
10 5 - 3

First stolen lineout ball and Ireland are really trying to keep it in hand here. Sexton runs the loop, evades a few tacklers and bursts up into the 22, he sucks in the tackler before passing it to O'Driscoll who runs in under the posts - a gorgeous opening score there and some lovely gliding running from the young fly-half.
11 7 - 3

Sexton can't miss from there and he doesn't.
12

Big chase from Max Evans from the kickoff, but he just knocks the ball into touch on the right hand side.
13

Now it's Scotland's turn to steal a lineout, with Hamilton pinching it at the front very cleanly. It's on the floor and just as the Scots look to attack, O'Callaghan hacks it back and the danger is averted.
15 7 - 8

A try for the Scots, the first they've scored since the Wales game! Ford winds a turnover and he offloads to Morrison at the 10m line who finds himself in acres of space on the right hand touchline, he makes it up to the 22 and offloads to the supporting Beattie, he looks like he's going to be stopped short, but somehow the big Glasgow number eight drags three tacklers over from about five metres out to touch down.
16

It's a hard touchline conversion for Parks and he just sends it wide.
17

Well, I feel bad about saying that this was unlikely to be a tryfest, we've got two already and both seems look set on throwing it around and keeping it in hand, great stuff. Scotland nearly have another break from the kickoff and Morrison latches on to a bouncing ball, but can only offload to O'Connell.
18

Ireland aren't having much joy with the scrum today and they're penalised just inside the Scottish half.

19

This is crazy stuff, almost like a Sevens game - Barclay knocks it on in the tackle just outside the Irish 22 and the Irish backs immediately counter, shipping it out to Earls who shows great pace on the left hand touchline to beat the defender on the outside - he's nearly clean through but he's snagged, who offloads to D'Arcy, who's also tackled, who throws a speculative offload behind him that's knocked on by Scotland.
20

Ireland manage to secure their own ball but Sexton nearly gives Scotland another chance, throwing a pass to no-one that de Luca only just fails to get to. They kick long and Southwell is penalised for not releasing just inside the Scottish half.
21

Sexton kicks for the corner and O'Connell makes no mistake with the lineout inside the 22, but Tommy Bowe knocks the ball on as he runs onto it to waste the opportunity.
23

Unfortunately I'm going to have to just waffle at you for a minute, we've entered the first period of mindlessly resetted scrums, but at least it's only three times...
24

Ireland are unrecognisable from the team we've seen for the last few weeks - they're looking to attack from everywhere and running some lovely patterns. Bowe comes off his wing and bursts through a gap, offloading to O'Driscoll just behind the 10m line, but he's snagged.
25

Ireland have a lineout just outside their 22, O'Leary box kicks from the maul and it's a superb chase from Bowe, who arrives just as Lamont secures it and puts him into touch.
26

Oh what a waste, Ireland are loose with the ball in possession and Scotland can clear their lines, but de Luca's kick is too long and it rolls over the dead ball line, giving Ireland another platform inside the Scottish half.
27

Ireland get some joy at the scrum and win a kickable penalty, but again Sexton kicks for the corner, he was awful from the tee last week, but surely they've got to start taking the points?
28

Sure enough, Scotland do a great job with the defensive lineout, win the ball and de Luca clears up to halfway - might Ireland regret that? They are still losing...
29

Another Irish penalty, just inside the Scottish half but in front of the posts. Scotland were penalised for going in off their feet. Sexton will kick for goal, smart move.
30

The slight young Leinster halback is having a nightmare with the goalkicking of late, and so it continues, that was from a fair way out, but it couldnt have been more central, he shades it wide though - you just can't miss those in international rugby.
31

Scotland look energised by that miss, they secure the restart and start pounding and probing the Irish line, with Lamont and Evans both coming in off their respective wings looking for work.
32

Barclay finds himself in some space on the right hand touchline and bursts up to the 22, he offloads to Evans who sends a lovely inside pop to de Luca, who pushes deeper into the Irish 22
33

Scotland keep their momentum up and they're really pounding the contact area, pushing the Irish back - Ireland look to have a turnover 5 metres out but it's knocked on. BOD has decided to have his customary injury scare early today, but he's down for a few seconds and gingerly gets to his feet.
34

Another early hit at the scrum from Ireland, how hard is it to listen to the ref? Scotland signal they want another penalty, they seem to have an edge here. Hayes is going too early almost every time for Ireland and Jonathan Kaplan's all over it, the big Munsterman is rapidly turning into a liability at the scrum today...
36

The ball is finally out of the scrum and Scotland look to batter their way through, but there's no delicacy to the play - they're just crashing against a wall of green defenders - as Wales discovered last week, you can't be that predictable against such a potent defence.
37 7 - 11

Ireland look to have turned it over in front of the posts, but O'Callaghan was sealing it off and he's rightly penalised. Parks makes no mistake with the kick and stretch the Scottish lead. Who thought I'd get to say that today?
38

Ireland look urgent and desperate to have the final word in this half, throwing it around and instantly getting inside the Scottish half, but it's lost forward by O'Connell and Scotland clear.
39

Parks' up and under is very good, it hands long enough to allow Morrison to challenge Kearney, who knocks on giving Scotland a final chance before the half.

40

Beattie takes it from the base of the scrum and gets a few yards, the big boys push the ball inside the 10m line and Lamont brings play up to just outside the 22 with a nice run.
40+1 7 - 14

Scotland keep it tight just outside the 22, looking to tempt Ireland into conceding, but Parks is back in the pocket when they don't and strokes a drop goal over to end the half. That's a seven point lead now.

Well, who saw that coming? Both sides have abandoned the conservative gameplans that they've adopted up to now in the tournament and it's been a very entertaining half. The big surprise though is that scoreline - the Scots lead by a converted try and they've played much better than they have since the Wales game. Hats off to Dan Parks, Graeme Morrison and the Killer Bees - Barclay, Beattie and Brown who have bossed the game so far.

Ireland haven't played badly at all so far though, but they've fallen fould of Jonathan Kaplan's whistle a bit too much, have lacked intensity at the breakdown at times, are creaking at the scrum, and are even looking a bit dodgy at the lineout. While I want to have an open game, Ireland's devil-may-care attitude is hurting them a tad and they maybe need to calm it down a little bit - they're not finishing off the chances, and knocking it on at crucial times - very un-Irelandish.

There's a suspicion that Sexton's offload to O'Driscoll for his try and the video seems to indicate it was, so Ireland can consider themselves fortunate they're only seven points behind, but they still have it all to do.

The BBC has just revealed that Jonathan Sexton has a 36% kicking success ratio - Ronan O'Gara's in 100% by the by. That is just unacceptable at this level, for all his excellent running abilities, he's got to work on that if he wants to keep that 10 jersey, or he'll find himself in a James Hook situation, and I don't think he's big enough to play centre...

Speaking of Sexton, he bounces the ball and gets us back underway with a long kick that's gathered by Beattie. Sexton sends up a Garryowen and it's gathered unchallenged by Kearney just outside the Scottish 22.
41

Cian Healey takes a poor pass from O'Leary - it was at face height from about two feet away - and understandably knocks on, but Scotland are penalised for being offside at the ruck and Sexton will kick for goal from the left-hand touchline.

42

These misses could really cost Ireland as Sexton hooks it to the left. We might see O'Gara's steady hand sooner than later at this rate.
43

Ireland win a tunover just outside the 22, Sexton delays the loop pass to Earls who bursts into the 22, only to be snagged and turned over by the Scottish forwards.
44

Beattie comes in at the front trying to fool the Irish lineout but he's quickly smothered and Scotland are pinned inside their 22 for the first few minutes of this half.
45

Another pinched lineout after Parks' clearance and Lamont takes the ball in midfield - he's in acres of space and the Scarlets wing isn't brought down until he's just shy of the Irish 10m line. He's snagged but Ireland are penalised for coming in at the side, and Parks will go for goal.
46 7 - 17

A slow deliberate buildup for Parks who stretches Scotland's lead to 10 with a well struck kick from in front of the posts - it's not quite panic stations for Ireland here, but it's getting there...
47

Scotland have been trying to throw it around inside their 22, but only to create space for the clearing kick - not a bad plan the way the Irish lineout is creaking.
48

O'Connell finally manages to secure his own ball and Ireland get all Munster on us, rolling the mall up from halfway all the way up to the 22 - that's a real tone-setter.
49

The maul finally comes down, but it's a penalty for Ireland, offside at the maul.
50

This is absurd - O'Gara is waiting to come on and is in fact 10 metres onto the pitch, but Sexton indicates that he wants to kick the penalty before he goes off - that's really petulant stuff from the young 10, he'd better make this.
51 10 - 17

He does, just, but that was hardly a moment where the youngster covered himself in glory...
52

O'Leary sends up a box kick from the 22 and Beattie makes a massive hash of the catch in acres of space - he knocks on and the Croke Park crowd are loving that, they're chanting loudly now.
53

O'Driscoll sends a lovely grubber through into the 22 and Kearney pressures Southwell into a very poor clearance from an obtuse angle, gaining almost no ground. All of a sudden, Ireland look reinvigourated.
54

Oh so close, O'Gara puts a lovely inside ball for Bowe who bursts through the gap, pushing up into the 22, but he's snagged, Ireland are getting quick ball here, surely they're going to score. Oh no they aren't D'Arcy is snagged on the left hand touchline and the forwards dive in, turning it over.
55

Another poor lineout from O'Connell - as good as he was last week, and he was very good last week, the Lions captain has been poor today. Nick de Luca looks to clear it from the turnover ball but he's barely gained 10 yards.
56

I'm sorry, are we watching Wales here? Am I colourblind? Yet another dreadful lineout which Barclay snags at the tail, he bursts up over halfway where Wallace is penalised for hands on the floor.
57

Big kick for Parks here, it's in front of the posts but about 50m out. He strikes it well, but it just fades to the right. Kearney clears long up to halfway.
58

Now it's Scotland's turn to assert some physical authority with a 15m maul up into the Irish half. A high ball is sent up for de Luca to chase, but he takes out Kearney in the air and it's a penalty to Ireland.
59

Great kick from O'Gara bringing play up for the Irish 22 to the Scottish 10m line. They finally manage to secure their own ball, but it's not straight - I can't remember the last time I saw an Irish lineout perform this badly. It's a credit to the excellent work from the Scots, but O'Connell and O'Callaghan are having a shocker.
60

Scotland look to have some momentum and get up into the Irish half, but Ireland strip the ball and win a penalty for the Scots holding on.
61

Another lovely touch kick from O'Gara brings play up to the 22.
62

Ireland actually secure their own ball, and O'Leary is so shocked he falls over for no real reason with ball in hand. He recovers though and Ireland can recycle.
63 15 - 17

Ireland have numbers on the right hand side and O'Driscoll delays the pass to D'Arcy - the centre seems to have left Bowe with too much to do, as two men are on him instantly, but he powers through and stretches to touch the ball on the whitewash. The try is instantly given, but I'm not sure if the TMO would have given that if he'd have been asked - it looked like Bowe didnt have that much control of it.
64 17 - 17

O'Gara keeps his 100% record up by putting a lovely conversion over from out wide to even the scores with 15 minutes left.
65

Bowe knocks on from the restart and Scotland have the ball inside the Irish 10m line.
66

The Scots have the put-in at the scrum, it's reset, and we'll have a break for some injuries.
67

Something finally goes right for Ireland at the scrum, Healey putting Murray under pressure and the prop is penalised for boreing in.
68

Another chance for Ireland just on the Scottish 22, but it's another wonky throw - Rory Best is all at sea at the minute and he's costing Ireland vital chances.
69

Well, I had a feeling it might happen at some point - Euan Murray, still a bit ticked off at being penalised at the last scrum, gets into some handbags with the Irish front row - Kaplan tells him to calm down, but the Northampton man has the look of a man who'd quite like all the TV cameras to be turned off for a few minutes...
70

Watch out, Murray really means business - he's taken off his scrum cap, which is sort of akin to when Arnie takes off his vest before the final showdown in Predator - it's on now. He'll be happy with that - Scotland win a free kick at the scrum and Lamont breaks up to the halfway line, they move up a few metres and Ireland are penalised for knocking it on.
71

Murray looks like a man who might tear his shirt off in Incredible Hulk style in a minute - it's worked for him though, he's won two free kicks and now Scotland have a kickable penalty.
72

This is a pretty straightforward shot really - just to the left of the posts and not too far out. Crucial kick though.
73 17 - 20

No messing from Parks there, he ignores the Irish boos and strokes it over to give Ireland the lead with just six minutes to go.
74

Earls thinks he's away up the left hand touchline from the restart, but he's called back for an O'Connell knock on as he contested the high ball. Murray has a wry smile - it's sort of like a grimace actually - as he's penalised at the scrum and O'Gara has a chance to level things.
75 20 - 20

Mister 100% is still exactly that, a lovely elegant stroke of the boot to bring Ireland level - great kick.
76

Both teams looking on-edge now, a bit tentaitve at the breakdown - no-one wants to give away a kickable penalty when things are this tight.
77

Oh dear oh dear. Kearney secures Dan Parks' high ball inside the 22, but rather than kicking clear or passing to Bowe, he tries to beat Danielli AND de Luca on the outside - he's caught and penalised for holding on.
78 20 - 23

It's from the touchline here, out on the left, but what a moment this could be for Parks. He kicks it and as soon as he strikes it, his hands are in the air, he knows he's got it - that was a superb kick.
79

Scotland secure the restart and they'll look to run the final moments down now - surely they can't be robbed of another win at the last moment?
80

Its a scrum to Scotland and Ireland fiercely compete, but they just can't get there - de Luca hoists the ball long into the stands and Scotland have won their first match of the Six Nations.

Well, what a fantastic game - Dan Parks the clear man of the match, kicking a superb winning penalty - and the Scotland players are jubilant, dancing on the pitch and who can blame them? Ireland on the other hand look completely shellshocked - they opened their Croke Park stay with a last gap loss, and so they have closed it. They'll be devastated, but the game was a great sendoff to the fantastic stadium - competative, entertaining and physical.

Dan Parks notes to the BBC - "We came to spoil the party and we did." No arguments, the Irish never saw Scotland coming, it was a truly brilliant 80-minute performance, whereas Ireland were far from their clinical, mistake-free best. That said, if young Jonny Sexton had kicked his points, then Ireland would have won.

Hats off to Scotland, they're doing a lap of honour and so they should. They've played so well at times in this tournament, they deserved something to show for it. Ireland however will have much to ponder - the O'Gara/Sexton question for one, and whether their usually dominant defence can adjust to Southern Hemisphere refereeing - two weeks on the bounce now, they've been absolutely slaughtered at the breakdown and given away loads of penalties. Against Wales last week they were too far ahead for it to cost them, but as today proved, they won't always be so lucky.

Thanks for joining me today, and indeed throughout the tournament, be sure to stick around for the climax of today's festivities where the now-confirmed Champions France will look to put a Grand Slam gloss on things against England."

That is a great find and read.

I love reading articles like that. There will be some nights where I will look up stuff on 700 WLW, my local flame thrower.

The history behind that station and the VOA is incredible. I have so many memories of seeing that absolutely huge tower/shape as a kid.
Thanks for a good read. :-)

Nothing weird about it. I'm in the audio business, and didn't

That was a great post, I heard a soccer game outside the US once on shortwave, must have been a pretty important game because I haven't heard one since. The announcer definitely knows how to "paint the picture" for the listener.

It is a Loose (very Loose) translation of sort of kind of how the

With this last point, I agree, although it depends largely on the quality of music on the IPOD. If it's pop pap, truly. Classical or jazz or other quality music deserves no small amount of respect, as do those who enjoy or make it.

As to amount of radio use, my home receivers are only on if I am in the room listening. I have considered using a recorder, but I do not have the radio attached to a PC and I am not sure how many stations would accept a cassette of a program for a QSL anymore (it sure would be handy for foreign language broadcasts).

OMG. when i'm home, old work-horse TT RX-350, in the shack, is on constantly with the computers back there. (my "den/shack/whatever hobby room"). other receivers there are on and off with use. also 2 scanners at the same time. when i'm not home, everything off and grounded. in the car, hand-held scanner, and a 440 or a 6700gr running. depends on the length of the trip. on-the-road and out of the country, a well used DX 390 goes in the luggage. third one, great portable over seas, and if it disappears, it cheap to replace. BTW, if i have friends, or a young lady over, every thing is off, and closed up. when people see the antennas, they already think i'm a little off, no reason to give any more info. the E1-XM in the kitchen and the old AR3030, in the bedroom are on when i'm in the mood. you know how it is, i'm one of those "radio people". and nobody, but other "radio people", get to see my collection.

No, but it could be whoever approves new members is on vacation or away from the computer.

If you don't pay, you'll periodically get a nag screen saying "Hey, please subscribe" but if you hit refresh, you'll get the page you asked for.

If you're not a ham, that may slow down the process too. A follow up might help. Mentioning you're interested in becoming a ham and are looking for information wouldn't hurt.

This bill will help my family considerably. My %^$%#^%$ insurance company already has been raising my rates constantly, and trying to give us the runaround. This thing, as odd as it is, will make a difference in several important salient health-related details, cost not being a big deal among them.

You can fire them, up until Obama signs it into law. Then you are forced to have insurance or accept government health care.

Too bad, you're forced by Obama to pay someone you hate.

According to schedule, the antenna from Bonaire is aimed almost due south (182 or 170 degrees). Which actually is good news because there is always some sort of backwhip in the opposite direction.

Right now, I have no choice anyway - if I don't pay installments to some bloodsucking insurer, I run the risk of my family - both of whom have highly treatable preexisting conditions - dying needlessly. If Obama and I really had our way, the government-run single payer option

- used VERY successfully by numerous more civilized nations around the world - would obviate the need to pay any private for-profit company whose sole goal is to milk me out of money and support me as little as possible in my time of need.

I don't especially care if you like the government option or not - the proof is in the pudding, and the substantial majority of people I have spoken with from those nations have good cause to believe that their systems work well. Many cannot believe the barbaric system we are still stuck with here in the States.

...right, either straight back or off at some 120 degree or so angle off the rear side. When I lived in Massachusetts 30 years ago - heck, here in California - the Bonaire transmissions do/were ALWAYS Glad you enjoyed it, radio history is fun to uncover. I have many fond memories of WLW. Back in the 1970's I listened to Marty Brennaman broadcasting the Reds games on many a summer night. Rose, Bench, Perez and the rest of the "Big Red Machine". Good stuff.

I'll occassionally tune in WLW nightimes now but usually don't stay long. The trucking network is okay but a little bit of that goes a long way. Unfortunately with syndication there isn't much to choose from on other frequencies either.

I heard a football i.e. "soccer" game on shortwave a couple of Saturday mornings ago (approximately 1500 utc) on BBC or Australian radio. It takes real talent to make a soccer game interesting that's for sure.

Rugby is much more exciting to listen to. The announcers are excellent and they always manage to capture the constant roar of the crowd as the match plays out. Someone posted that they no longer broadcast rugby on shortwave but if you do manage to find a match (best chance would be Saturdays I think) give it a listen, you will get a big kick out of it for sure.

The Brazilian station(s) often broadcast soccer games...at least they did a few years back when the sunspots allowed them to be heard well.
I think Australia also broadcasts rugby from time to time - I just heard such a broadcast two weeks ago. It was, not surprisingly, an Aussie team vs. a Kiwi team.

Heck yes Bruce - or at least seven/eight years ago - SW stations received them. Gotta kind of watch it though because it can get expensive. I forget which countries sent me QSL cards, I know for a fact it was in the double digits for shortwave and four to six for the BCB.

This bill may not be perfect, but...

1) The current medical system is definitely broken.

2) Most people are only one pink slip away from needing the health care this bill provides...and we all know that there has been a blizzard of pink slips over the last few years.

Hey, I forgot to ask. You don't have an array of antennas outside that you can't hide so she doesn't know you're a 'tad off'? ;-) Outside antennas are a dead give away!

Hey Dave, you're lucky to have it set up like that. I have a couple of older computers that aren't serving me any purpose as of now, it's something to think about because I know it'll open up a whole other side. FWIW on the tubes - I have four complete and tested sets for the 129X so I think I'm good to go for a while but I don't plan on running it 24/7 forever. It helps to have found a good repair guy in my area.

I recommended Eternal-September, as well. Been on it for about a year, myself, without issues.

So, he's got options. Google is less than a practical solution, because of the graphics on the pages. As I recall, he's on a dial-up.

Then, again, he may be in no hurry, either. I took more than a year off of USENet, myself.

The uninsured should just be made to pay in full for any emergency services rendered, even if it means $100 a week forever.

I have 3 HF radios on 24/7, two of them are connected to the internet for monitoring from anywhere. I would not leave a tube radio on 24/7, due to the waste of electricity in keeping the cathodes boiling.

I'm in the audio business, and I have sound from every source I can find. Since wavetable synthesis came around in the mid '90s I've HAD to

That is kind of what I was thinking. It's not even five minutes for googlegroups...but even if he didn't want to do google - there are so many free usenet servers out there - I've used two others , I still have one in my favorites.

This morning, one of the thingys Paul Gallo mentioned on his radio talk show was lava tunnels on the Moon, deep lava tunnels.I think he mentioned Space magazine.He said it doesn't say so, but he thinks that is where those space aliens are coming from.

I am worried that Paul Gallo has gone off his rocker.Maybe he needs to take a vacation.

They say paying members are the only ones who can see a new ad for the

I didn't lose my job, but when I suffered a severe knee injury almost 3 years ago, the wonderful health care system put me into a near death spiral that I just managed to pull out of last November. And I have pretty decent insurance, and make a decent amount of money. Between using up my 3 seeks of sick pay days, I still missed nearly two months of work, had some insanely high bills my insurance didn't cover anything on, like my 15 minute each way, $974 ambulance ride to the doctor and back to the rehab place, I was seriously messed up. I went through my savings that were depleted from the original injury that started it all, and I quickly got into big trouble. I really don't see how this bill could make it any worse than it is already.

The $25 a day private room I had to have to keep from losing my mind with roommates who did one or more of the following wasn't considered a medical necessity:

1. Raved incoherently and called the nurse over and over again, all damn night.
2. Turned all the lights on at 445AM, put the TV up to full volume, and then screamed into his cellphone. I got very hostile.
3. Had gas so bad, it made me gag. All the time. He was the only sane roommate I had, a nice guy who was recovering from a near death hospital screw up. He was already trying to figure out what kind of new truck he was going to buy with the settlement. It was going to be big, real big. His doctors told his wife she should donate his organs, and she almost did, but woke up with his faculties intact, everything changed.
4. A guy who moaned all night while he was asleep, and when he was awake, wanted to call his daughter, even after he had just hung up with her. He couldn't dial a phone to save his life.

I bet they would change their tune real quick if they had to stay with a couple of those crazy bastards like I did.

I don't understand the doom and gloom either. As for Passport, I thought it had come to be overrated, especially it's equipment reviews. Plus, print publications now have to compete against online sources of information and a world of stuff is now on the web about shortwave, ham radio, etc. Many of these publications are struggling for the same reason conventional newspapers (and, indeed, SW BC stations) are struggling: people are going online and getting info that way.

As for the the SWL hobby more generally, I again don't understand the doom and gloom. Yes, lot's of big broadcast stations are disappearing, but they make up only a small percentage of what one can hear on shortwave. People's reactions here would make one think that, pretty soon, a big swath of the radio SPECTRUM (roughly 3 to 30mhz) is just going to disappear!

I don't know how old you are, but if you can swing it, the AARP long term health care insurance is a bargain, if you need it. My mother had it and it was a lifesaver, paying for 3 years of assisted living that I had no possible way to pay for. I'm getting it for myself, since you never know, a person I went to high school with died a few years ago of an aneurysm. She had no real symptoms, and ironically was a nurse. She got home from work one night, said she was very tired, and dropped dead right after calling her mother to see if they were going shopping in the morning. She was 48.

Thanks - Well, it's not quite so bad - my wife and son both have asthma, which for some is a mild annoaynce, but for others can become life-threatening - but it's under control, as along as the insurance company we use does not decide to pull the plug. We are lucky - we can afford it. I feel horribly bad for those who must live without treatment for this common, treatable but potentially deadly affliction.

Could you give a few more details on the AARP insurance, BDK? I'm retired and taking care of my mom who may need just what your mom did. Just tell where to look and I'll do the legwork. Thankyou.

That married Irish woman wayyyy over yonder across the big pond in Bognor Regis,England, she is part Irish, part British by Ancestry.

Her dad lives in Bognor Regis too.A few years ago he went to Limerick,Ireland to visit some relatives and friends.His doctor in Bognor Regis had told him it was ok for him to travel.As soon as he got to Limerick, he wound up in Dooradoyle hospital in Limerick.His prostate gland had swollen up and was just about to bust, nearly killed him.The surgeons at Dooradoyle hospital saved his life.They were amazed that his doctor in Bognor Regis had told him it was ok for him to travel.
I still have the email letter she sent me, telling me all about it.

You think socialized health care is good for America? You haven't seen anything yet!

Well, that's one. To set and match it - my Dad, depending on US medicine, did not know he had stomach cancer until it was too late, thanks to 40 years of inept Americam medicine. Another - my Mom had cancer for three years, died of it, and the doctors never did figure out what kind of cancer it was! So don't give me any bullshit about the British medical system failing its patients - the US fails as often if not more, and the life expectancy in the UK, despite what can only be described as a horrible diet, is a year longer than the US.
Same with about 30 other nations who all have socialized medicine.

We ourselves spend a good deal of time wondering if my wife's asthma is going to be effectively treated next month or year. Something they do not fear in Britain.

I have plenty of stories from Brits who would not trade their system for the third-world system we have in the States. People with chronic diseases and disabilities, people who have immediate problems in their homes, get medical attention when they need it, day or night, at their homes, and they pay not a penny OOP. They have plenty of $$$ for travel, hobbies, nice homes and fun.

Graphics on pages? You mean like the frames they use? Other than those, Google is not graphics-heavy, at least by 21-st century

Yupp. Good for you, David - I need a bit of sanity myself once in

If at all possible, I want a real QSL - so...

If I have a snailmail address, to ensure a snailmail reply, I send it there - UNLESS, like Radio Nederland, VoA, Radio Prague, Radio Romania International and a few other major broadcasters, they encourage e-mail reports for hardcopy QSLs. With Deutsche Welle, whose English website instructions leave just enough uncertainty to make me wonder, I sent a snailmail. Needless to say, the service was exceedingly fast for two-way overseas mail. I need to send them a "thank you" for great service. Radio Prague was like this too - ten days after an e-mail report, I had a QSL in-hand.

All of my QSLs received to date are snailmail hardcopy, but if necessary, I would accept an e-mail QSL. I have a slew of them out right now, sent by either snailmail or e-mail - RNZI, R. Romania I., V. Nigeria, Channel Africa, VoA Botswana, RN Madagascar, Vatican, V. Russia, R. Japan, Twentieth Century Radio, Radio Victoria - we'll see what comes back.

Alec Baldwin vowed to leave the country if Bush was elected, too.
He's still here. But that's not hypocricy.

Well, if you think about it, were all a tad off, when it comes to this hobby. and, yep, just like receivers, i got way too many antennas. got- 2- Wellbrooke loops, 1-SA7000 for the really high bands, 1- inverted L 180', 1- inverted V Alpha-Delta DX-Ultra, 1- Par EF-SWL end fed (this is a super ant.), 2- long wire e/w n/s, 1 BOG 650', and last but not least, 2 Discone for the 3 scanners. and, in the box, 1- RF Systems DX ONE PRO MK 2. soon as i can pick up 30 to 40 foot of tower, it goes up about 100 foot from the house. the pro 2 must be far from any noise. yep, i'm a bit off when it comes to shortwave. now don't get me started on my receiver collection.

Well, I guess I missed that - in any case, I don't care - pick on him all you want. Celebrities who make brash promises they don't intend to keep deserve whatever verbal stings they receive - it goes with the territory. That goes for Reps, Dems, Commies, Fascists and any number of hobgoblins lurking out thar!

You misunderstand, the Government health care in England didn't miss the cancer, they knew she had it early on, they knew it could be treated....
The FREE GOVERNMENT HEALTH CARE CHOSE NOT TO tell her that she had stomach cancer and they were letting her die with the full knowledge that she could be helped.

Doctors here in the USA confirmed that treatment was an option but by the time she was informed.... it was too late.

I hope you get Government health care, you deserve it. It's too bad you have to move to get it but I don't feel bad about that.

The Constitutionality of government health care here in America will never allow it, this law Obama signed is unconstitutional and he knows it.

To begin with, it will allow government to tell a woman what to do with her body.

I have said no such thing. I am saying the polls indicate a majority of the public opposed the health care bill just passed by the House. Hopefully, those Representatives who felt it necessary to show disdain for the will of their constituents will be replaced at the next election.

It was the BIG 8 CKLW in Windsor, Ontario. I think they ran more than 50 KW not being regulated by the US. All you could hear in Detroit on 800kHz. In fact, all you had to do was turn up the gain on any amp or PA system and you would hear them.

OK, well - you still have one data point. I have lots of datapoints that say otherwise. One of my own British friends, who has gotten what she believes is the best cancer treatment on earth, and which has kept her alive and comfortable for decades, would undoubtedly disagree with you, for example.

Just to annoy you,. I am staying here in the U.S. - NYAAHHH! Where I can already have the quality of health insurance you abhor.

Constitutionality? WHAT Constitutionality? Please don't invent false arguments. I doubt if you know the Constitution from a telephone pole. It is neither constitutional nor unconstitutional until the Supreme Court decides the case.

Tell a woman what to do with her body? I know you are just DYING to explain this one.

If people are as poor as you say, they are unlikely to see any additional expense from this bill.

I wish my taxes DID go up this month, but they didn't. I pay far too little, and so do many others in my tax bracket. I would be happy to help. Our infrastructure is collapsing, and it won't get fixed without $$$$$$$. Many things i care deeply about are going unfunded.
As it is, however, my taxes have dropped over the last many years, and as yet show no sign of increasing.

Gas is already $3 here. Has been for months now.

They are on the air at 800kHz, but as a newstalk station. Power is reduced to 50 KW. Still have the CKLW call.

They do broadcast from the old CKLW studios with the call CKWW on 580 kHz with an oldies format. They modified the old CKLW jingles to match the call. They even have a few (or at least one) of the old disc jockeys. Charlie O'Brien is still on the air in the morning. Unfortunately, they only run 500 watts but I listen to it in my car as long as I am in range.

You're in for a big surprise. The country can't afford free health care. Your cost of health care will go up.

Prove it, please. Maybe it will, maybe not. It already jumped 73% this month; you think it will be worse than that? Explain. Be specific. Extra points given for avoidance of opinions in place of facts.

You are paying $3.00 per gallon of gasoline now? It will get up about $3.50, probally more, where you live, just you watch and see.About two - three months ago it was $2.37 per gallon here.Wayyyy back before the days of the automobile, gasoline was a waste product, the refineries used to throw it away.Nobody had a need for it.People were using kerosene for their kerosene lanterns wayyyy back then.At least one of the refineries has already shut down part of their production of gasoline, the better to SCREW the public with.I posted an article about that in the rec.autos.tech newsgroup, if you want to dig around over there and read it? Screw the public? Isn't it good business practice to provide only what the public needs and demands to optimize the balance between supply and demand (and your bottom line)? Sounds to me like the Oil Companies are being smart businessmen. They are out to MAKE MONEY, not provide the public with the best possible price. They are happy to collect as much per gallon as they can, as long as you keep buying. I don't like high oil prices any more than the next guy, but that's what business is all about.

Next time you tout free enterprise, think about that. I'm all for free enterprise, but you had better be ready for the public screwings when they happen - it's all part of the game. If you want to offset that problem, buy some oil stock or a natural resources mutual fund, and pay yourself back in dividends from the higher oil prices.

This is something you don't seem to understand.

Rates WON'T go down under any scenario as long as they include private insurance companies. Ever. Period, Therefore, I readily admit that my rates won't go down in the foreseeable future. With or without this bill. Period. In fact, they will continue to rise either way, as they have been for decades.

So, if you care ONLY about cost for those who have existing insurance, then I agree - this bill does not do it. Nor will anything else short of a major overhaul of regulation.

However, for those of who place value on something other than coin, this bill does a lot, and there are parts of it that are beneficial to me and my family in ways that you apparently are unable to understand. You're just going to have to accept that fact. Or not, but you ignore the benefits to others at your own risk.

And for chrissakes, stop being an anonymous, name-calling, cowardly bully. It does nothing for your credibility. Name calling and insults does not = facts or rationality.

It probably won't, at least for those who already have insurance. For those who now pay nothing, either by choice or by necessity, there will be some variation. Nothing will reduce costs, short of a single-payer plan or severe regulation plus some changes in the way pharma and health conglomerates do business.

But, that is not all there is to it, at least IMHO. There's alot more to health care than cost, and this bill addresses many of those issues in a positive way (at least for my family). I'd bet a king's ransom I'm not he only one for whom this is true. If the cost of the plan is the only thing that matters to you, then I agree, the bill is probably worthless.

It may -- or may not-- reduce the cost of health care. But it WILL stop

If you can, sign up ASAP, so it will be all in effect before when/if she has to go someplace, as it takes a while to get rolling. The plan she had paid about $3000 a month for 3 years. That $100,000 or so it paid made everything tolerable. I just couldn't have taken care of her anymore, and if she had still been here when I hurt my knee, it would have been a total trainwreck. It pretty much was anyway, but it could have been a lot worse..

Good luck.

The Real Arithmetic of Health Care Reform

By DOUGLAS HOLTZ-EAKIN
Published: March 20, 2010

ON Thursday, the Congressional Budget Office reported that, if enacted, the latest health care reform legislation would, over the next 10 years, cost about $950 billion, but because it would raise some revenues and lower some costs, it would also lower federal deficits by $138 billion. In other words, a bill that would set up two new entitlement spending programs - health insurance subsidies and long-term health care benefits - would actually improve the nation's bottom line.

Could this really be true? How can the budget office give a green light to a bill that commits the federal government to spending nearly $1 trillion more over the next 10 years?

The answer, unfortunately, is that the budget office is required to take written legislation at face value and not second-guess the plausibility of what it is handed. So fantasy in, fantasy out.

In reality, if you strip out all the gimmicks and budgetary games and rework the calculus, a wholly different picture emerges: The health care reform legislation would raise, not lower, federal deficits, by $562 billion.

Gimmick No. 1 is the way the bill front-loads revenues and backloads spending. That is, the taxes and fees it calls for are set to begin immediately, but its new subsidies would be deferred so that the first 10 years of revenue would be used to pay for only 6 years of spending.

Even worse, some costs are left out entirely. To operate the new programs over the first 10 years, future Congresses would need to vote for $114 billion in additional annual spending. But this so-called discretionary spending is excluded from the Congressional Budget Office's tabulation.

Consider, too, the fate of the $70 billion in premiums expected to be raised in the first 10 years for the legislation's new long-term health care insurance program. This money is counted as deficit reduction, but the benefits it is intended to finance are assumed not to materialize in the first 10 years, so they appear nowhere in the cost of the legislation.

Another vivid example of how the legislation manipulates revenues is the provision to have corporations deposit $8 billion in higher estimated tax payments in 2014, thereby meeting fiscal targets for the first five years. But since the corporations' actual taxes would be unchanged, the money would need to be refunded the next year. The net effect is simply to shift dollars from 2015 to 2014.

In addition to this accounting sleight of hand, the legislation would blithely rob Peter to pay Paul. For example, it would use $53 billion in anticipated higher Social Security taxes to offset health care spending. Social Security revenues are expected to rise as employers shift from paying for health insurance to paying higher wages. But if workers have higher wages, they will also qualify for increased Social Security benefits when they retire. So the extra money raised from payroll taxes is already spoken for. (Indeed, it is unlikely to be enough to keep Social Security solvent.) It cannot be used for lowering the deficit.

A government takeover of all federally financed student loans - which obviously has nothing to do with health care - is rolled into the bill because it is expected to generate $19 billion in deficit reduction.

Finally, in perhaps the most amazing bit of unrealistic accounting, the legislation proposes to trim $463 billion from Medicare spending and use it to finance insurance subsidies. But Medicare is already bleeding red ink, and the health care bill has no reforms that would enable the program to operate more cheaply in the future. Instead, Congress is likely to continue to regularly override scheduled cuts in payments to Medicare doctors and other providers.

Removing the unrealistic annual Medicare savings ($463 billion) and the stolen annual revenues from Social Security and long-term care insurance ($123 billion), and adding in the annual spending that so far is not accounted for ($114 billion) quickly generates additional deficits of $562 billion in the first 10 years. And the nation would be on the hook for two more entitlement programs rapidly expanding as far as the eye can see.

The bottom line is that Congress would spend a lot more; steal funds from education, Social Security and long-term care to cover the gap; and promise that future Congresses will make up for it by taxing more and spending less.

The stakes could not be higher. As documented in another recent budget office analysis, the federal deficit is already expected to exceed at least $700 billion every year over the next decade, doubling the national debt to more than $20 trillion. By 2020, the federal deficit - the amount the government must borrow to meet its expenses - is projected to be $1.2 trillion, $900 billion of which represents interest on previous debt.

The health care legislation would only increase this crushing debt. It is a clear indication that Congress does not realize the urgency of putting America's fiscal house in order.

Douglas Holtz-Eakin, who was the director of the Congressional Budget Office from 2003 to 2005, is the president of the American Action Forum, a policy institute.

Did anyone ever see the first programs of SCTV (Second City Television) on the Global Television Network from Canada? They were on from around 1976-1978. I was close to the border in Detroit and they had a station in Windsor, Ontario. I would never miss a show. Now that was great TV.

Anyone who saw some of that stuff on Global remember a show called Shh! Its the News? They made fun of news shows. They used to have a skit at the beginning of the show with an old couple watching TV and the skit would always end by someone saying "Shh! It's the News" - but they would run the first two words together. Then they would throw the TV out the window. Again great stuff and it was ahead of its time. I think it may have been a production of SCTV.

I've never lived in Cincy. I was born and raised on the plains of Nebraska and way back when that made for lots of excellent electromagnetic radiation. This was before cable and ESPN, satellite dishes and hundreds of tv channels so all I had was radio and books and it was wonderful. I was a great dxer and didn't even know the term existed or what it was. All I knew was that I loved listening to my inexpensive made in the USA radio that caught every signal on the AM dial that mattered and lasted forever in spite of being dropped and knocked about regularly..

700 WLW boomed into Nebraska from Cincinnatti, 1020 KDKA and Bob Prince broadcasting Pirates games from Pittsburgh, 1030 WBZ and Boston Bruin hockey games from Boston, 1120 KMOX and Harry Cary (yes he used to be the Cardinals play by play radio man and then Jack Buck) from St. Louis and Dan Kelly's St. Louis Blues hockey broadcasts, 750 WSB Atlanta Braves, 1100 WWWE Cleveland Indians and Herb Score and Pete Franklin sports talk before it was fashionable, 1080 KRLD Dallas Texas Rangers, could even pick up Giants games on KSFO in San Fransico when conditions were right.

And lots of good talk radio before the cartels ruined it...Herb Jepco and the Night Caps on KSL out of Salt Lake City, Bill Barker on 850 KOA Denver, Jack Wheeler on KDKA after the Pirate game, etc. etc. etc. The list could go on and on, every city had their own local hosts and callers and it didn't take long before you felt you personally knew all of them.

Yes I was truly blessed to grow up before radio was destroyed.

Wow! I'm upper class bourgeoisie!

Look at me, I'm so privileged :-D (Actually, I am well below the tax rate lower income horizon of $250k for married).

An outstanding comedy show! Great writing and fantastic character acting by a top notch all Canadian cast. My favorites were Rick Moranis playing Dick Cavett, Eugene Levy as Sid Dithers, Dave Thomas doing William F. Buckley and John Candy in everything.

Saturday Night Live wasn't even close to this classic. Canada hit a home run with SCTV!.

Something is not adding up here.

Did this guy read the whole bill? This same guy who was in charge of the CBO when Bush charged up a trillion bucks worth of war debt and a half trillion of new Medicare prescription coverage for seniors who he felt would vote his way in 2004? And did not apparently bat an eye about THAT?

Why have NONE of the Republican leaders made a single one of these specific points at any time in their diatribes, choosing instead to use gauzy generalities about budget without specific reference, right up to the final vote? Why did THIS guy wait until the last possible minute to roll out this buzzword-filled argument, instead of putting it out there a week in advance so that it could have a real impact? Or is it actually like so many other Republican stunts these days, a desperate tissue of lies that must be shoved out quick and dirty because, given even a tiny iota of time, it would be exposed as the fabrication it really is?

Or maybe it was Joe Flaherty who did William F. Buckley. Eugene Levy as Henry Kissinger and Floyd the Barber. Rick Moranis doing Merv Griffin and Woody Allen. Cathrine O'Hara as Lola Hetherton. Martin Short doing Jerry Lewis and David Steinberg. Dave Thomas doing Bob

TWR had an enormous 500KW AM station on Bonaire until a few years ago. A real gorilla of a transmitter they used to have! Was audible very often up here, in NYC. The best times were usually between 1 to about 5 AM. Cannot hear it any longer since the power was cut to normal levels.

Hello Somebody... great to hear from you after all these years!

I do plan to get back on the air, but it will have to wait until I can arrange to move to a new QTH, since this location is not antenna-friendly.

Also, I'll have to start entirely fresh in the equipment department, since _everything_ I own was stolen by my estranged wife with the complicity of the FBI's "Joint Terrorism Task Force," who collaborated in falsely charging and imprisoning me.

Meanwhile, I enjoy the online shortwave receivers that some folks have so generously made available. There is one in Syracuse and one in Connecticut that have very good 160, 75, and 40 meter reception.

With my best,

Kevin, WB4AIO.

Those surveys were too vague to have any meaning. No one knew what was in that bill. They knew what they heard from the mainstream media, which was (and is) totally distorted and flat-out inaccurate.

When asked about specific provisions, including a public option, the people are overwhelmingly in favor of the legislation.

What I see on TV is a bunch of media toadies fighting against a slight tax increase on their oligarch masters. Limbaugh's pissed because he has to pay a decent income tax rate.

Fair is for leetle gurls.

This new law will protect me and my heirs from losing the house. That alone is enough for me. I'll be old enough for Medicare when most of this kicks in. Just like when I turned 21 and they lowered the drinking age to 18.

Why should they have to participate? Nobody that already has insurance is required to buy more. Military retirees do not have to buy insurance because they have lifetime coverage. If you are already insured, you will not be required to buy more insurance. Congresscritters all have free government coverage. Not sure whether it's for life or not, but certainly while they are in office.

It will cost more to do nothing.

What we can't afford is shooting wars on the other side of the world.
That's the 800 pound gorilla. War is fucked-up. Why don't we give each Taliban 50 grand to leave us alone. Still cheaper than martyring them.

The wealthy upper class should be taxed back into the comfortable middle class, and the proceeds should be used to improve life for everyone. One of the founding principles of the USA is that we do not have family dynasties.

Here's some "spin" from the web page you directed us to.

Add the people who oppose because the bill is not liberal enough (13%), and the people who support the bill (39%), then you get 52%, which is more than half.

I live on the 2nd floor of a condo (no outside antennas allowed) with a random wire (60') from my R8B, out the window, and thrown over a tree branch. No separate feedline; just one length of thin wire from radio to tree. As expected reception is compromised with excessive noise. Can anyone advise if there is a way to reduce the noise? Can't have a ground rod. Don't want to move. Would an active antenna be an improvement or a waste of money? I do understand that I'm never going to have a Good setup, but just looking for some improvement.

Thanks...Bob

An impedance matching transformer might help.

Here's a link to simple plans for making a 9:1 transformer:

Well, that's true of 99% of websites today. Many of them load slowly on high-speed, never mind dialup.

If I had to use dialup, I'd quit. Life's too short. I hope he finds

3591. Liberty Net for Week of March 20-27

Liberty Net for Week of March 20-27

http://3950.net/2010/03/liberty-net-for-week-of-march-20-27/

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

THE LIBERTY NET for this week was characterized by mostly good propagation and some of the most impassioned discussions heard this year.

There was some intentional interference, but nothing that significantly hampered communications. The Liberty Net is on the air every Saturday night at 10PM Eastern Time on or near (within 10 kHz or so) 3950 kHz.

Here is just a small sampling of highlights from this weekï¿½s edition of the longest-running discussion net in amateur radio:

ï¿½ Thereï¿½s a reference to the Liberty Netï¿½s ï¿½listeners in Ft. Meade, Maryland,ï¿½ (location of the so-called National Security Agency) as one station opines that Net Participants are the modern-day equivalents of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. (14 minutes)

ï¿½ Many AM stations ï¿½ both amateur and broadcast ï¿½ have quite good audio fidelity. (18 minutes)

ï¿½ Why is Texas threatening to write Thomas Jefferson out of its history textbooks? (25 minutes)

ï¿½ The White wife of Black Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas is attempting to become a player in the Tea Party movement. (1 hour 7 minutes)

ï¿½ Is Obama pushing a health plan he knows will not work, in hopes that it will break the current system and leave us helpless ï¿½ so we can be ï¿½savedï¿½ by a Cuba-style ï¿½reformï¿½? He may be surprised, though ï¿½ many thousands of Americans are so angry at the bill that they will finally sever all ties, emotional, financial, and legal, to the regime in Washington. (1 hour 21 minutes)

ï¿½ The actual head of the federal government, Rahm Emanuel, is not an American. He is a foreign national, who actually fought for a foreign power, with no loyalty whatever to the American people. (1 hour 28 minutes)

ï¿½ It seems that only White people are capable of being guilt-tripped into sacrificing their own future: China and India are not falling for the con games of the same parasites who have raped America and Europe nearly to death. (1 hour 31 minutes)

ï¿½ An innovative new Web site is http://fiverr.com/ which features people offering a universe of services theyï¿½re willing to perform for just $5. (1 hour 48 minutes)

ï¿½ A Pakistani immigrant in New Jersey was caught engaging in his specialty, urinating on women in public. He was in jail earlier, for attempted murder and assault, but he was released in a year. Why do we allow other nations to unload their criminals on America? The ï¿½diversityï¿½ religion leads to insanity. (2 hours 37 minutes)

ï¿½ In Miami, a ï¿½traditional African churchï¿½ (read: a Voodoo cult) has been started, which has been promoting the drinking of the mucus of the giant African snail to ï¿½healï¿½ various afflictions. The practice has landed several Blacks in the charity ward of the hospital. (2 hours 45 minutes)

ï¿½ A public meeting in Kentucky erupted in wild cheers when a Liberty Net participant asked a candidate ï¿½ Rand Paul ï¿½ if he was in favor of abolishing the Federal Reserve. (3 hours 45 minutes)

ï¿½ The political and personal record of John McCain ï¿½ a man who claims to be ï¿½differentï¿½ but who is in fact an eager accomplice of the regime in Washington ï¿½ is particularly loathsome. (3 hours 58 minutes)

There was some intentional interference to the Net this week, but perhaps thatï¿½s a badge of honor: if those who hate free speech hate the Net, then Net participants must be striking a nerve among the enemies of freedom. Check-ins begin at about the five minute mark.

Remember, thanks to N2SAG and N2IRJ and W1WCR, you can listen live ï¿½ and chat live ï¿½ via the Web whenever the Liberty Net is on the air. And, as always, you can download the Net right here at http://3950.net and listen at your leisure.

I can't see a 9:1 transformer making one scrap of difference.

Its normal application is to enable you to locate an antenna remote from house (and hence from sources of electrical interference), and bring the signal back the receiver via screened (coaxial) cable. The purpose of the transformer is to help minimise the 'pot-down' of the antenna signal on those frequencies where the antenna impedance is a lot higher than that of the 50 or 75 ohm coax.

There really should be a good ground connection at the antenna-transformer-coax interface. If there isn't, the 'ground' will via the braid of the coax. However, unless the coax braid can be grounded, it will effectively be part of the antenna, and you are likely to get interference pickup on the coax. Things might be a bit better than simply bring the antenna wire directly to the radio, but I wouldn't count on it. An active antenna would probably be a better choice, but needs investigating.

What bill had the public option and which poll covered it?

Please cite the specific poll that says this. Also it's odd that you include those who don't support the bill because it's not liberal enough as supporting the bill.

If you want a balun assembled:
http://www.universal-radio.com/catalog/antsup/1484.html

If your noise is due to nearby electrical equipment you may want to try an active noise canceller:
http://www.universal-radio.com/catalog/filters/0094.html

Hopefully a balun will help. An active antenna would probably be worse. If you have 60 ft of wire that should give you pretty good signal level. Be sure to run coax from the radio to the balun. This is key to getting rid of interior electrical noise. It would be best if the balun was outside but I realize it might be noticed. Keep it as close to the window as possible.

There was no such bill that made anywhere near the final cut - but when the GP was asked about specific ideas, whether in a written draft or not, numerous polls since the beginning of this debate showed a fairly substantial, if not always overwhelming, preference for a public option. IF you want me too, I believe I can locate the results of "a few." Say the word.

Uh huh.

I have many very conservative friends, and all of them, except one, thinks the stuff being said by some of the people they hang around with is really scary, in more ways than one. One friend belongs to two local gun clubs and the stuff he hears is way over the border into looneyville. They range from birthers to believers in secret plots by, usually jews, but the jews aren't the only ones they are afraid of. Name the group, and there's at least one guy who is claiming there's a plot by them to do something, even if that something makes absolutely no sense whatsoever.

He laughed at one of the comments and got a lot of dirty looks, so he's deciding if he wants to renew his memberships when they come up. There's so much tension at these things that the info and connections the clubs give him aren't really worth all the stress. And trying to keep a straight face is becoming very difficult to do.

From the CNN/Opinion Research Poll:

21. (IF OPPOSE) Do you oppose that legislation because you think its approach toward health care is too liberal, or because you think it is not liberal enough?

QUESTIONS 20 AND 21 COMBINED

Mar 19-21

Favor (from Question 20) 39%

Oppose, too liberal 43%

Oppose, not liberal enough 13%

I happen to know a fellow (a co-worker) who took a job in one of offices in England. He's a former Army officer, a hard-over right winger. He had a heart attack while in England and gave himself over to the British medical system. He never had a bad word to say about it. His treatment was good, the doctors and nurses caring and professional and the hospital -- if a bit old -- was clean. It was also cheap and he didn't have to bicker with an insurance company about what was covered.

How an individual such as Rahm Emanuel can become one of the most powerful men in government is astonishing. His father is a Zionist terrorist and his son Rahm volunteered to serve in the Israeli Army rather than enlisting in the U.S. military. Another oddity is that he worked tirelessly for Hillary Clinton against Obama but was given the powerful Chief of Staff position in Obama's cabinet.

From the Chicago Tribune:
"Additionally how he made $16 million dollars in just 3 years is a scandal that has been conveniently ignored by most of the controlled media. Emanuel's Freddie Mac involvement has been a prominent point on his political résumé, and his healthy payday from the firm has been no secret either. What is less known, however, is how little he apparently did for his money and how he benefited from the kind of cozy ties between Washington and Wall Street that have fueled the nation's current economic mess.

Though just 49, Emanuel is a veteran Democratic strategist and fundraiser who served three terms in the U.S. House after helping elect Mayor Richard Daley and former President Bill Clinton. The Freddie Mac money was a small piece of the $16 million he made in a three-year interlude as an investment banker a decade ago." Story continued at http://www.chicagotribune.com/news/politics/obama/chi-rahm-emanuel-profit-26-mar26,0,5682373.story

It appears that the Israeli Mossad asset Rahm Emanuel has the goods on Obama. It has been said evidence of Obama's homosexual encounters exist. I don't know if that is true but it fits the Jewish Mossad's modus operendi. It is common knowledge that they collect blackmail material as a matter of course on people in positions of influence.

Anyone picked up Radio Pyongyang recently? What are they saying about the Dear Leader?

From Times of London
"North Korean leader suffers from kidney failure that requires dialysis, and also has partial paralysis after a 2008 stroke, South Korea claims.

The North Korean leader Kim Jong Il is suffering from kidney failure which requires dialysis and also has partial paralysis following a 2008 stroke, according to the head of a South Korean state research institute.

Nam Sung-Wook, director of the Institute for National Security Strategy, said the paleness of Kim's fingernails indicates the 68-year-old leader has chronic kidney disease.

The institute has links to South Korea's National Intelligence Service. Nam's remarks, in a speech at a Seoul forum, were quoted by South Korea’s Yonhap news agency and were confirmed by the organizers of the event.

"Chairman Kim Jong Il is suffering from diabetes and high blood pressure and we believe he is undergoing kidney dialysis every two weeks," Nam said. "[The pale color of] his nails indicates he has chronic kidney failure."

Nam showed photographs of Kim to illustrate his point. The North's official Korean Central News Agency frequently releases color photos of the leader.

"However, it's not an easy task for him to restore his full health because of his age," Nam said. "At his most recent public appearance on the occasion of a public rally in [the northeastern city of] Hamhung on March 7, he was slamming down his right palm on his unmoving left palm."

The leader of the secretive nuclear-armed communist state has not publicly appointed an eventual successor, but the regime is reportedly promoting the virtues of his third son, Kim Jong-Un.

Kim's regime is under pressure to return to six-nation nuclear disarmament talks which it abandoned last April."

MLB by RF Systems is a very good accessory to diminish noise-have it for several years with exceptional results... Also, we must remember that a vertical component in an aerial always picks up more noise than a horizontal. Now- on the subject of gounding. A ground does not always attenuate noise. In fact, I have witnessed quite the opposite. Ground does not have to come from a rod driven into the ground. For instance: if the plumbing in the building is metallic, then a cold water pipe may be the solution. Or, if the structure is more up-to-date,a steel beam (if acessible) is just as good. Some types of noise(constant sparking, HV AC lines, strong intensity RF etc.) cannot be eliminated but rather reduced,sometimes significantly. What type of noise are you experiencing, is man-made or just static discharges (natural)?

You could try swapping out the wire antenna for a loop. You could homebrew a small loop that you tune manually, with a small capacitor.
If that works well but you want a loop you don't have to tune, you could always pick up one of the Wellbrook loops. They aren't cheap, but you don't have to tune them.

For better or for worse, our society is pretty much based on the automobile (generally speaking, lousy public transportation, spread out suburban areas, etc).

He could pretty much 'phone in' his show from Costa Rica. I'm sure that CC would quickly spring for a T1 line and a Vonage box (so he could have a US toll free number).

I have measured dialup for $8 a month and Elite DSL (5 Mbps) for $32 month. Together they still cost less than Time-Warner Roadrunner and work way more reliably. In some areas you don't need a phone # and DSL is even cheaper.

Because I want to F*ck your Socialist Society as much as possible....
The cost is taxed and taxed again, SO the government is taking a big hit with each person that quits driving. I have a bicycle and live close to most anything I want.

> For better or for worse, our society is pretty much based on the > automobile (generally speaking, lousy public transportation, spread out

Yes I know And I was OK with it 30 years ago but then I had kids and started fighting the Government encroachment into my family and my life and I've been at it ever since. I'm chuckling at people just catching on to the fact that your society has become a Socialist society.

Talk about asleep at the wheel, Socialism has been growing in teh education system since I was a student and I have seen what 40 years of indoctrination has done to the Nation. So I take every chance I can get to F*ck the government out of a dime. It seems so much better than letting things come to a point where civil war breaks out and people start shooting at each other.

I could be out spending money and enjoying Society, but that would be less than living up to my commitment to freedom and a bit hypocritical, so I give up some things to try to make a better life for my children, freedom is always better than planned indoctrination and tax slavery.

Maybe he's like my neighbors down the road. They paid cash for their house, almost $200K in 1994, and never got insurance. In early 2007, it burned to the ground, due to an electrical problem in the attic, they lost 50 years of family pics and everything else they owned. They said on TV, =3FWe never thought we would need it!=3F. Morons. How cheap do you have to be to not have homeowner=3Fs insurance? I went by the empty lot a few minutes ago, and there they were, sitting in their car, like they usually are. There=3Fs nothing there, so I have no idea why they do this.
Doesn=3Ft matter how bad the weather is, most days, they are sitting there in the car, or on nicer days, folding chairs.

It appears that they are finally going to start rebuilding soon, as there are stakes that were put in recently.

It "seems"?

Well, you didn't say you wanted to see the polls, so I won't bother to look for them. As far as details, the important one is that under a public option, everyone who signs up gets insurance in exchange for the pay-in fee, which is basically a tax on the specific service. I think everyone who took the polls pretty much understood that. What other mysterious details did you have in mind?

If I lived in a small town and close enough to a food store, I wouldn't need a car/van/truck.I would make a little trailer for my bicycle (I own a made in Germany 1976 Hercules Moped too, it has bicycle pedals on it) and use that to go to the food store, other stores around town.

Some people just do not want the hassels of owning and maintaining a car/van/truck.Same as with computers too, I know some people who do not own/use a computer.They are not missing anything at all neither.

I think Costa Rica is pretty summerlike most of the time, hot and humid. Maybe the article you read said Costa Mesa...here on the Cal

The danger to America is not Barack Obama but a citizenry capable of entrusting a man like him with the presidency. It will be easier to limit and undo the follies of an Obama presidency than to restore the necessary common sense and good judgment to an electorate willing to have such a man

Mr. Obama, who is a mere symptom of what ails us. Blaming the prince of the

,,,and actually, the most recent Gallup poll suggests the opposite anyway - just one poll, and this could change, but somewhere there is a disconnect between the pundits and the pollsters.

Whoops! Not trying to start trouble, but...

If they are not missing anything with a computer, then what are you doing here? Isn't this comment sort of a self-indictment?

Actually, it used to be that everything now on the internet was available in print or on media from somewhere - possibly hard-to-find or inconvenient to locate, but available. The internet puts almost everything at your fingertips, as well as providing a social gatheirng place. I think you know this, and I think you'd miss it for sure :-)

Wow, what a bitter, angry person you must be. You want to make life better for your children, and I do not fault you for that, but such an attitude passed onto them will fill their lives with a lot of anguish. Oh well, they're your kids - do with them what you will.

You first need to identify the noise source. Could be power line arcing due to a bad insulator, or a neon sign, or whatever.

What does the noise sound like? Just a steady buzzing sound or something else? Does it cover the whole shortwave spectrum or just a certain range? Better/worse in rainy weather? Try to find a pattern based on time, weather, etc.

If the antenna is near the source of the noise, you might be better off with a smaller antenna further from the noise source. Experiment!

Earthquakes are always showing up everywhere - they just don't get reported much unless they are in populated regions. The last year has been seismically rough for lots of people, but the earth has moved on average no more or less than in other recorded periods.

The New Madrid Fault, though, is itching for an 8.5 any moment...

It's not just N. Koreans that see themselves that way. It's Koreans in general. To this day, children born of outsiders are frowned upon. As late as the mid 1970's, women were still considered property here. Now they practically run the country (or at least practically OWN it).

Well, at least his Subject line appears to be honest. :-)

BTW, the only "problem" with eternal-september is that they do not carry the 'binaries' group from the antique radio forum -- where they post pictures. Otherwise, the price is right!

Watching WLBT 6:00 PM tv news.A nine year old boy at 351 Knob Hill Drive in West Jackson called 911.He said he was at home alone and had not eaten in days.The cops went over there, they had to break into the house to get the boy out of there.The boy is in a private care clinic in Memphis,Tennessee right now.

Looka here, those two B HO ButtKissers who live next door to have a six years old girl and a baby about two months old.When that woman is at work, he baby sits those two kids.Often times he gets in his car and he goes wherever, there is a Chevron gas station with a mini food cafeteria thingy at the top of the hill from me, I reckon that is where he goes, he gets back over there next door a few minutes later.Meanwhile, those two kids next door are home alone.

And you are a paradigm of sanity? Most sane people think choosing to destroy their careers by indulging in illegal drugs in a motel room with kids they are trusted to supervise and teach is insane.

Really Mr. Bryant is there anything more pathetic than a fat-assed balding old man trying to be "hip" and "cool" with the kids? Even Steve Nash's haircut thinks that's effed up.

"And, as always, don't let your children attend Louisville Technical Institute.
They've hired at least one dufus who once claimed to have a PhD, and who knows, there may be more dufi there".

You must be some worthless parents, I'd die for my kids if need be. A little scrapping for them to have freedom is nothing, to me it's just like any other challenge..... you can run and hide or hit the ground running and meet it head on.

Did you teach your kids to roll over and play dead like you every time government wants to screw them?

And all this changed your life how?

I've only had insurance on one house, my first house that I stupidly got a loan to purchase.... I never made that mistake again. I didn't need insurance on a house "I" lived in, I am a very careful person, but if you're an idiot.... you may want it. Why would I want to take on risk of your careless lifestyle, also there are people that burn their house down to get the money, why do I want to be in "business" with that kind.
Do you think you can win with those people?

I never had a fire or any other disaster that was able to destroy the homes I bought.

Well, IMHO you are very lucky, very naive or both.

As the old saying goes: "Stuff happens".

A defective appliance (with a counterfeit UL seal), a good appliance that legitimately fails, lightning. Or like my neighbor across the street -- they were not at home, they had baked goods on a plastic cutting board on the stove, the dog jumped up to try and get the food, accidentally turned on the stove and caused severe fire damage to the home. Furthermore, had the fire been worse than it was and had it been windy, the flames could have jumped to the house of an innocent neighbor next door -- who would hopefully have insurance.

There are literally a million -unforeseen- things that could happen that are beyond -your- control. You can be the most careful person in the world, but that won't stop a runaway car from smashing into your house nor will it keep lightning from striking. I don't know what state you live in, but how about tornadoes, floods, hurricanes, heavy snow that collapses your roof? You do not have to be an "idiot" to need insurance.
Quite the opposite, as a matter of fact. You would be an idiot to think that you -don't- need insurance, either that or be a heck of a gambler.

> I never had a fire or any other disaster that was able to destroy the > homes I bought.

All that proves is that you were very lucky. For your sake, I hope your luck continues. But I STILL think you are being incredibly naive and are taking a big gamble.

Been there, I bought at the top of a hill, in an area where tornadoes typically went around. 15 years there, never had a tornado near the house.

I built the Barn and the roof was 2x6 truss.... the house was built well enough with enough pitch.

I don't gamble, it's not very entertaining, I never bet on sports or any

I was in an earth quake.... I was renting and happy not to own anything in that area. I have minimal belongings so losing my "stuff" is not an issue.

Shit happens, but it usually happens to people that haven't learned

About a year ago, I built a wooden fence along both sides of my yard, to keep those B HO ButtKissers from driving and parking on my yard.That B HO ButtKisser across the street came over here when I was building my fence.He put his damn mitts on my fence, he said,,, The first strong wind that comes along is going to blow that fence down!!!
2'' by 4'' wood posts I hammered into the ground with my sledge hammer and two rows of 1'' by 6'' boards (it is all pressurized wood) I nailed to those posts,, and he (''he'') told me, The first strong wind that comes along is going to blow that fence down!!!

Doesn't matter whether you are at the end of a street or not. I've personally seen people running from the cops crash their cars into homes in the middle of the street. This can happen ANYWHERE.

The tallest structure thing is a myth. It may make some degree of difference what the height of an object is, but it's not a given. Take a golfer out on a course that gets hit when there are tall trees nearby.

They didn't USED TO have tornados in the LA basin, either.. but recently there have been some. In Portland, we had never had one in my lifetime until 1981, they just didn't happen there (hilly area, usually prone to strong east or west winds), but we had one nonetheless.

Nobody is without the chance of a disaster happening to them. It's not a safe planet. Insurance is a good idea, where possible and feasible.

Comes right down to it, medical care anywhere is a crapshoot. That's why malpractice suits are so popular, and one of the primary reasons for the high cost of health care.

An Allied SX-190. This radio, while not quite the best thing out there, was pretty darn good for 1970's vintage, and had some nice features - HAS some nice features - that helped the DX.

Just got me one in really nice shape. Clean as a whistle, sensitive, and everything works. The guy who sold it to me did some of the mods on it to sweeten the thing up, and it sounds great. It doesn't have all the modern bells and whistles, but it has decent selectivity with its mechanical filters, tunes easily and accurately to within 0.5 kHz (try that with almost any other consumer-grade analogue RX) and it sounds clean and clear with its matching speaker.

Overloads a little bit on 31 meters, and maybe on 41 and 49. Easily resolved by putting the AF Gain all the way up and using the RF gain for volume control.

Just listened to VOA Botswana relay on 9885, BBC from Cyprus on 12035 sandwiched between VoRs powerhouses 5 kHz up and down, and a bunch of other good stuff. Hams sound like they're in the room with me. This thing is FUN, and is a real pip :-)

It only has the stock - including the two ham bands 20m and 80m that puzzle some folks (why not 13 and 60 for SWL?) but it has the spaces for two additional, and I think I know some companies out there that can make custom crystals for the radio. I expect that I will try to get some for 60m and for 13.5 - 14 MHz. Since each one requires the addition of an internal cap, these may be it for awhile - or maybe I'll get fancy and come up with an easy system for plugging crystals in and out with a variable cap so I can get other bands. We'll see.
I still need to perfect my cornball antenna system.

Thanks, yeah, it's pretty nice. Just a fun, old-timey and very attractive radio. It is the first radio I have that my wife noticed and approved of the aesthetics ;-)

Yeah, absolutely right. This will change only slowly - like so many things in this universe, the physiology of living things is stranger and more complex than we can imagine. Doctors have no choice but to make a mistake sometimes.

I do think we need some level of tort reform. A valid malpractice suit is one thing - a move to be as greedy as possible is quite another.

Funny, I don't see any cites that poll about a specific bill. When people are asked a theoretical question without specifics, they tend to answer differently than when the learn those details.

You could always buy or build a VFO (or a stable signal generator) and mark the frequencies you need to set it to for each band

My life didn't change in any way, but it sure changed the lives of the dopes who lost everything, rather than pay a few hundred bucks a year for insurance. They're sitting in the driveway this morning, like usual.
Sad, and just weird.

So you paid for your trailer in cash? Good for you!

Only an idiot wouldn't want it. You could have the same issue the people down the road from me had, some wiring in the attic deteriorated over the 55 years since the house was built, they never went up there, they are over 70 years old, so they had no chance of finding it. It apparently wasn't obvious to their son when he took his stuff out a few months earlier when he got back from Iraq.

Ever see a house where the water pipe breaks and floods it? That's happened to people I know too, a long time ago. Ruined just about everything inside the house, and destroyed a huge model railroad collection and layout in the basement. The insurance paid up, it wasn't enough to replace all the train stuff, but it was enough to replace about 85% of it, and fix the house, of course. It was an older house, and the pipe that went to the upstairs bathroom just rusted out and broke. They were gone overnight, and came back to water coming out the basement windows.

> Why would I want to take on risk of your careless lifestyle, also there are people that burn their house > down to get the money, why do I want to be in "business" with that kind.

What are you smoking/huffing now? My only house insurance claim was when the kid next door shot out two big picture windows with his BB gun. The insurance paid it, and then sued the next door neighbors, who kept denying that their kid did it, even though I saw the barrel of his Crossman BB gun go into the window a second after the hole appeared. When he got grilled by the insurance company's lawyer, he cracked in a couple of minutes. His folks paid up, and moved soon after.

> Do you think you can win with those people?

Who the hell are you babbling about now?

> I never had a fire or any other disaster that was able to destroy the > homes I bought.

You've gambled, and won, so far, good for you. When I was a little kid, a kid who lived a couple of streets over decided to play with matches and set the garage on fire. Burned up the car parked in it, and basically destroyed the garage and kitchen. They had insurance though, so it only cost them a few hundred bucks. They were lucky that the neighbors called the FD right away, as dad was passed out asleep after a big night out on the town and it took a while for the firemen to wake him up.

Little kids do dumb stuff all the time, like leaving faucets on, throwing clothes on lamps, etc. Then there's the times where a friend of your kid comes over and there's an accident. You want to pay for shoulder surgery, etc, on your kid's buddy out of pocket? A friend of mine was the kid who got hurt when he tripped on something (Probably a foot of one of the other kids), and fell and broke his shoulder and tore it up badly. It wasn't cheap, and if the parents weren't responsible enough to have insurance, they would have had to pay it out of pocket. Most people don't have thousands of dollars laying around to pay for a new house, or a visitor's injury. Ever been bitten by a dog? I was once, it wasn't a big deal, but later on, that same dog did a real number on another kid's face. 35 years later, he's got a nasty scar on his cheek. And no he didn't do anything to the dog, he was at their house, his mom was best friends with the dog's owner, and the dog just nailed him on the face.

Think a little, for once in your life. It won't hurt too bad.

I hope you have insurance on your car(s), but you probably don't. Just like the loser who turned in front of me 7 years ago. It took him five years to pay off the insurance company after they sued him. I got back my deductible, since I was his victim. The evil black box in my truck proved my version of the accident was true, and his, claiming I had no headlights on, was BS. Twenty years old and owing 33K to the insurance company is no way to start adulthood. Hopefully, the five years of payments he made to the insurance company convinced him to at least get liability coverage.

Yeah, he's gambling a tornado always misses his house, that lightning never hits it, that a tree never falls, or some idiot without car insurance never drives his car into his house, that his TV, stove, etc, etc, never catches on fire. The list of stuff he doesn't think will ever happen is endless.

He just seems like such a stable, responsible guy, doesn't he?

Neither is my house and tower, not even close, but I have had two direct strikes and a bunch of near misses in 28 years that damaged PC's and VCRs. It wasn't worth filing claims on, so I just ate the cost. But if it had set the house on fire, it would have been nice to get money to

You've been lucky, great. Doesn't mean you always will be. You really

I was only there long enough to get through it. I did spend a night in Dallas though. Had one of the worst meals I have ever had at some seafood place that got a great review in the paper. I hope it was just a bad night or something, but all four of us got things you can get in any midwestern city, and it's almost always great, but not there. I got the most tasteless fried catfish I have ever had. My mom got some worthless shrimp and the other two people with us got some lousy rainbow trout.

The hotel was nice, it was brand new.

Interesting idea?? If I did this, would it be connected directly to the crystal socket? The radio has an internal VFO, but it comes after each crystal.

Well, with all the stuff wrong with him, that will come in handy. He has more doctors at 50 than my mother does at 85!!

Internist
Proctologist
Urologist
Cardiologist
Ophthalmologist

Too many "ists" for me. I just have a family doctor. Of course, I don't have all the stuff wrong with me he does. And sadly, it all runs in his family, all six of his brothers and sister have the same issues.

You have a funny way of excluding specifics and mixing apples and oranges.

It's a cure for millions being without insurance and for people having their coverage dropped by private insurance. That's the point.
Medical science will continue to do what it does regardless of insurance, and vice-versa. Just because one has flaws is not an excuse to ignore the betterment of the other.

Good morning, all - heard tentively this morning on 41 meters on Allied SX-190 and the wires...

(From EIBI:)

26 March 2010:

7195, 0600-1300z, UGANDA - UBC Radio (EE to EAf)

SINPO = 21442. Heard at 1300z and also thereafter in EE; lots of ham QRM but otherwise clearly heard discussion of African topics by YL. No ID heard in brief time of reception, but can find no other reasonable possibility.

7215, 1200-1400z SaSu, ETHIOPIA - Radio Fana (AH to EAf)

SINPO = 35444. Plainly heard both just before and just after 1300z, virtually no QRM, did not recognize language (neither Latin nor Asian) so assumed tentatively to be this station. Based on EIBI schedules, could find no other reasonable possibility.

Corrections welcomed! If I am right, these are both new stations and nations heard at this QTH :-)

Thanks to everyone for their responses.

If I wanted to start with installing a balun between antenna and feedline is this a situation where price does matter? Universal Radio has The RF Systems Magnetic Longwire Balun (MLB)for $80USD and this one listed on on Ebay http://tinyurl.com/yf3v2lz is $20 (9:1 Longwire, Balun, Unun,Adapter, Shortwave) Not trying to be cheap, but just to "see if it works" $80 is expensive and $20 is reasonable.

Also, must the balun be installed outside to work? The more I have outside the better chance it will be detected by the "Condo Police".

In can be inside, but better outside, and/or as far from the noise source as possible. Ground it if you can, but if you can't, not the end of the world. Paint it the color of the building; it will look like the electric company put it there. I'd try the cheap one first.
You can make your own with good quality parts worth about $10, so the extra cost is probably not a big factor in performance.

Good luck - noise is a tough thing to quash sometimes.

I'm not familiar with the seller, but for your purposes, the lower cost one should work well. He's reduced his costs by using off the shelf PVC pipe parts.

I'd put the impedance matching transformer as far as possible from noise sources. If the best you can do is the window sill, well that's the best you can do.

Something to consider is thin coax like RG-174 is a bit less obvious. If you could shoot a run of that to a tree, you could hide the balun among the branches.

Doubling the distance from noise will reduce the noise signal by a factor of 4.

In my case I have my swl antenna 225 feet in back of my house and I send the coax through underground pipes I had installed. It comes out at my storage shed. I did it for the noise, but it's quite stealthy.

My only regret is I didn't run heliax so I could use it for transmitting.

Well, I think we will have to disagree. Individual events are perhaps wrong steps, but the larger arc, I believe, is a positive one.

If the oscillator in the radio is right, all you'd need is a coil and variable capacitor. Some crystal oscillators work with an LC circuit connected instead of a crystal, some won't work that way.

But this is really a silly idea. You'd have to build a nice stable oscillator, one that worked up towards the near 30MHz, and with good calibration. Unless you get fancy, you'd have to have a bandswitch for the oscillator to cover the full 30MHz needed, which is extra complication and a source of instability.

It would work to give you a peak at full coverage, but I sure wouldn't suggest it as a regular thing.

That's the whole point of the receiver. It's in effect a receiver that tunes a fixed 500KHz segment of the spectrum (I can't remember what frequency range) with a crystal controlled converter ahead of it to cover the different bands. The variable oscillator thus can cover just a small segment (which gives that uniform calibration across the bands), and at a low enough frequency to be stable. Plus, it doesn't need to be switched to change bands. You lose the key feature if you toss out the crystal control of the converter and use a variable oscillator there.

At this point, it shouldn't be that much trouble to build a synthesizer that makes the first oscillator as stable as a crystal, but allows a signal that can be tuned in 500KHz steps across the 1 to 30MHz range. A 500KHz reference is pretty easy to filter, unlike synthesizers that have 1KHz or lower steps. That's what everyone went to almost forty years ago when solid state meant synthesizers were relatively easy to build and there were still lots of receivers that didn't tune the whole shortwave band because the cost of crystals were too high.

An alternative is to study the oscillator and decide if it will be fussy about crystals or not. If it's not, then start looking for cheap crystals of appropriate frequency, and then use those. The manual for the receiver will give the formula for ordering crystals, but that would be costly. What some noticed with that design of receiver in decades past was that one could often get by with additional coverage by using oddball crystals. So instead of paying to have a crystal ground for a specific frequency, say 22MHz, you might find one that 21.454MHz and live with having to calculate the frequency (or make a chart). The frequency will still be as accurate as the dial, you just have to add the oddball crystal frequency to know where it is tuning. Or if the oscillator is of the right type, one might find an 11MHz crystal and it would not only oscillate in the receiver's oscillator but put a good signal out at 22MHz only, so you get the frequency range you want.

I got some declassified CIA documents regarding the A-12 crash near Wendover Utah. In the 400+ pages, there is a chronological log of the events of the flight. This particular page notes the radio stations and beacons used with the planes ADF. Of interest is a beacon on 377KHz, noted as both XTS and STB.

www.lazygranch.com/images/cia/wendover/xts_stb_earth_377.jp2
You will need irfanview with the plugings to view this document.
http://www.irfanview.com/

Any ideas on where this NDB is located? Note that many of the beacons on the list are now history. [Austin was converted to DGPS] so this is probably an historic beacon as opposed to operational.

>into the morning. Has this become a pirate sub-band elsewhere in the world?

I will check out that range.

I have had pretty good luck listening to US pirates in the 6900 to 7000kHz range. Lately I have heard WBNY, WHYP, WEAK, CYOT and a few others. Most used frequencies 6900, 6925, 6950 or deviating a few kHz.

WHYP has a fairly strong AM signal and usually broadcasts for more than an hour anywhere from 2200UT to loss of propagation after dark.
Programming is pirate radio talk, equipment, etc. and music by Devo.

CYOT plays the bark of a coyote before broadcast and sometimes the Canadian National Anthem. Mostly music with frequent ID's.

There was another station on that ID'ed as some variant of Blitzkrieg Radio. Program was 30-40's music, German speeches and some English and some German talk by a live or recorded operator.

Numbers station on 6855 kHz AM right now. 2138 UT.

Just a little while ago I bought a new in the box Grundig g5 for $59.95; complete with ac adapter, travel pouch, and owner's manual; at the Radio Shack store in Southside Plaza in Richmond, Va. I believe this was the last new g5 available at that location. Apparently, Radio Shack has decided to discontinue the g5, but store managers have wide discretion over pricing. For example, this afternoon a salesman at the Chester, Va., location, a few miles away, tried to sell me the same radio (but a display model with no accessories) for $80 and change. So it's a good idea to call various RS stores and check g5 pricing and availability very good price, I paid full price when I got mine. The only thing I don't like about my G5 is the sound quality, even the G6 and G4 sound more natural.

No they didnt throw gasoline out. Gasoline has to be refined. It aint

Nope, Cuhulin is actually correct this time. Gasoline, back in the old days when the primary product from oil was kerosene, gasoline was a waste product from the refining process.

From Wikipedia:

"In the 1800s, refineries in the U.S. processed crude oil primarily to recover the kerosene. There was no market for the more volatile fraction, including gasoline, which was considered waste and was often dumped directly into the nearest river. The invention of the automobile shifted the demand to gasoline and diesel, which remain the primary refined products today."

Yeah, thanks - I just hope they are accurate. I could find nothing else in any available schedule that looked remotely close - if I am right or wrong, I hope someone confirms or corrects me -

If you think it went out of control in the last ten years, you shouldn't be surprised if it goes out of sight in the next tn years.
They just might ration it so only those who exempted themselves from it will get it.

But the information imparted by both those media continues to be ably served by web streaming and podcasts. Those of us who enjoy SWL for the process and the hardware can use any kind of signal, (the weaker

Gasoline is a volatile, flammable liquid obtained from the refinement of petroleum, or crude oil. It was originally discarded as a byproduct of kerosene production, but its ability to vaporize at low temperatures made it a useful fuel for many machines. The first oil well in the United States was struck by Edwin L. Drake near Titusville, Pennsylvania, in 1859 at a depth of almost 70 feet (21 m). With the development of the four-stroke internal combustion engine by Nikolaus Otto in 1876, gasoline became essential to the automotive industry.
Today, almost all gasoline is used to fuel automobiles, with a very small percentage used to power agricultural equipment and aircraft.

Petroleum, a fossil fuel, supplies more energy to the world today than any other source. The United States is the world's leading consumer of petroleum; in 1994, Americans used 7,587,000 barrels of oil per day.
Petroleum is formed from the remains of plants and animals that have been held under tremendous pressure for millions of years. Ordinarily, this organic matter would decompose completely with the help of scavengers and aerobic bacteria, but petroleum is created in an anaerobic environment, without the presence of oxygen. Over half of the world's known crude oil is concentrated in the Persian Gulf basin. Other major areas include the coasts of Alaska and the Gulf of Mexico.

Very bad today or I have tree limbs on my longwire. I'll check it later.

Day time here but I'll try for a few minutes.

The RCI stuff to the USA is not going over here and I think on of their feeds come out of Cuba.

Many people think that it's not a fossil fuel. Check out 'abiotic oil'.

Oil is NOT a step towards coal formation, as I was taught in my formative years.

This is a lot more up to date. Apparently, you don't know a lot about S.
Korea. They really don't care what anyone thinks, when it comes to the North. They speak their minds. The way it sounds right now, the N. had nothing to do with it, and they're trying to gingerly step around a major faux-pas. If it was an attack by the DPRK, they would be johnny-on-the-spot to say so, especially to placate the families of the missing.

Aside from that, Harlem is the not new yuppie neighborhood. They've torn down most of the old buildings, fixed up the rest, now it's just another place with a Starbuck's on every corner a BMW in front of every house..

About 65 miles, we did a smooth roll for about a minute. I was sitting at

How cold is it up there, we are and have been in the 90's.

How about some working freq.'s for NK. I use to be able to DX them but the

I get VOK only rarely. It's really too close for HF work. I have a better shot at hearing their MW signals on 1080 and 810 KHz, which I can hear on the car radio most anyplace north of Seoul. Too much jamming down this far (80Km south of Seoul).

Now, Tim, no need for vulgarity! Some people hate him because he's handsome; some because he has a gorgeous wife; some because he made it to President and they didn't; some because he's so damn much more intelligent; some because he wrote a bestselling book; some because he beat them to the punch with good ideas; some because he co-opted a half-dozen REPUBLICAN ideas before the the Republicans could take credit for them; some because he gets to hobnob with Nancy Pelosi and the Kennedys; some because the American people chose HIM to rub in the face of the sore loser neocon Republicans; some because he's just SOOOO Obama! Not EVERYONE who hates him MUST be a racist! Right, Bob? ;-)

Not really my country. I just live and work here (for the US military). The subterrain around that island is very rocky. The entire Yellow Sea is very very shallow. The difference between high and low tides at Incheon is around 2-4 Km of sand, mud and the remains of various shellfish, soju bottles, beer cans, ad inf. I have no problem believing they could bottom out or high center themselves at the very least. I can see a situation where they grounded the screw and some boy genius tried to free the ship by pushing the engines so far they blew up.

As far as the random shot, they SAID that they saw something on the radar and took a shot at it. The captain later said it turned out to be a flock of southbound birds.

Can't say how accurate the accounts are... I'm JAFO.

My oldest sisters son was in the U.S.Air Force.Back in the 1970s he went to South Korea and he married a South Korean gal.They have a daughter about 20 something to about thirty years old.They live in Oklahoma now.Their daughter is very, very quiet, sort of aloof and stand offish.She is very pretty.I don't know if she inherited that from her moms side of the family, or whatever.

I think there is at least one Korean restaurant in the Jackson area and no doubt some Koreans who live in the Jackson area.I don't know/haven't met any of them though.

I've been reading and hearing since last night that the Gubiment has fired the first volley at a number of militias - Michigan and Ohio being two of the three?

Have you heard anything about it? It seems like all the sudden the media isn't saying nothing about it but apparently the FBI/BATF were at different street corners last night along with helicopter coverage in Michigan.

Just north of Detroit in Michigan.
I am an amateur operator but I like to listen to AM shortwave and MW.
I will work a new DX station or a friend if they show up on the ham bands. Propagation on the upper frequncies has finally improved.

Just about time to scan the band and find out what is going on in Korea. Best regards Bruce.

When I was in the Army at Scott Air Force Base,Illinois, (Nike Hercules Missiles, with Nuclear Warheads on those Missiles.It was the Cold War, we protected Saint Louis) I bought a 1957 BMW Isetta car from an Air Force Officer at Scott A F B.

That damn little bitty car was a Death Trap! I sold it to an Army Officer at Scott A F B when I found out I was going to Vietnam.

I was Glad to get rid of that POS BMW!
I don't Ever even want to see a BMW again! I still have the big thick operators/maintnance manual that came with that BMW Death Trap car.It is sitting in a foot locker in my bedroom.A woman in Germany was the first owner of that BMW Death Trap car.I reckon she had Good Sense to get rid of it too.

I have owned three Volkswagen air cooled engine vehicles (1961 VW van, 1963 VW car, 1970 VW van) before too.They are also Death Traps.

Looks like they might be sending amplitude compandered single sideband on 9330kHz. Glenn Hauser mentions this in one of his columns regarding 9330 using CUSB. You can test it out. Put your radio in LSB and you hear very little. USB and you hear the normal signal. But you still have a pilot carrier so it will sound OK in AM mode.

As you recall, there was quite a bit of concern about W's two "wins" being "on the up", first the Supreme Court hanky-panky and then the suspicious Ohio election. :-(

Er waren dus meerdere "laz(s)ers...

An official note from the creators of Lazer Hot Hits:

Just to put things in perspective: this crew has no relationship whatsoever with the original LASER, or LASER 558, (notice the S) that broadcasted ed on AM from the ship 'mv communicator' located in international waters in the North Sea during 1983-1987. But of course we share some principles, so you will understand when you read on.

During the early nineties, New Beat was in its last phase, and a new music phenomenon was about to spread: HOUSE. As all new music styles, House was adored by the youngsters, but outcasted by the established government, national press and radio stations. House was presented to stimulate young people to take drugs, participate in acts of violence, and other, more negative aspects of our society. Just imagine that these people, who now condemn House, were the same generation that loved 'Rock and Roll' 20 years earlier!
(Of course, history has proved them wrong, and today House music has been recognized as the most important musical revolution of the nineties...)

As a direct result however, DJs and record labels did not get any airplay on the national media and the Internet was not really developed yet. At that time LAZER was started off.
AT first, LAZER was a pirate radio station, playing non-stop house music in 1991 . Tapes were recorded during weekend nights in famous clubs and by various top DJs. Later on they were broadcasted on FM in their original versions. All mixed, with no real spoken anchor men.

What's in a name?
The name LAZER was chosen, because of several reasons:

The original LASER did not exist anymore.
A direct 'feeling' with the background of a pirate radio station.
The English spoken jingles of the original Laser were a good 'fit' with our music style and were available immediately, without real investments.
The original concept of using a laser effect sound signal, containing a long-short-long tone, which --in marine terms-- means 'I want to communicate', reflects the same basic principles of this crew: trying to promote House and Dance music.
The first transmissions were broadcasted from Antwerp, Belgium, on the frequency 97.1 FM.
The result was astonishing! In a few weeks time, LAZER became enormously popular and was heard in all 'boom-cars' on the road. But nobody knew where the signal came from, nor who was behind the project. Several news reports indicated that LASER, the original AM radio station from the eighties, had begun to transmit again, but this time on FM and from a ship on the North Sea, or near the Antwerp harbor. Unnecessary to say that at the time we heard those news reports, we were rolling on the floor, laughing!

The whole dance and house scene immediately supported LAZER with the newest records, advertising and co-marketing. The first LAZER parties were organised at the famous club 'La Rocca', located in Lier (nearby Antwerp, Belgium). For the first time in Belgian history, a house party was live broadcasted on the radio. Party people who arrived by car at the party, were already listening to the live music from the club they were about to visit. This really gave a 'special touch' to our project.

During 1989 and 1993, several frequencies (87.7 FM, 88.6 FM, 100.3 FM, etc) were tested and new locations (Ghent, Brussels, Ostend, and even several cities in The Netherlands) were added. At its peak, you could hear LAZER all over Flanders, Brussels, and half of the Netherlands territory in stereo. (At that time it was forbidden for local radio stations to broadcast a stereo signal)
The main revenues of LAZER came from advertisements of the many new emerging House discotheques and from organizing LAZER parties in many clubs. However, the main losses came from confiscations of the radio- and studio equipment by the Belgian government (LAZER never got a license and was confiscated several times, because 'we were the devil'). Even legal radio stations, who had an official license, were harassed, and in one case a license was even revoked, because they played House music and mentioned the LAZER parties.

But more and more legal radio stations began to capture the signal and relay it, others saw the potential of this new House scene and began to promote House music on their own. Finally, a national radio station, Studio Brussel, could not ignore this new music trend any longer, and began its own radio shows with House music, organising their own parties with live music from the clubs.
By the time LAZER had to stop its transmissions in 1994, House music could not be stopped anymore...

Although the grotesquely misnamed liberal, lefty and progressive radio program Air America is off the air, its lies, its perverted mission live on. Hoping to recoup some of their massive investment (and maybe paying the bilked Bronx Boys' Club?), investors are holding a public auction of all remaining assets. And I do mean all. In addition to the usual office furniture and supplies, private intellectual property is up for bid.

Yours maybe?

3927. Dosy SW-4 antenna switch - question

Hi - Query about the Dosy SW-4 antenna switch - it appears to be designed to shunt the inputs of up to three antennas, or a dual horz/vert antenna, in a couple of different configs, to a single TX/RX. On EHam, there is one review post that suggests it could used in the opposite sense, that is, route one antenna input to three receivers or transmitters, or two selected RX rigs at one time.

Is there any reason to believe that this unit will not perform the latter effectively? I don't care about using two RX at a time on one antenna, but I like the Dosy because it sits neatly and conveniently on a desktop rather than hang on some wall or rack like the usual "octopus" style inline switch.

Thanks,
Bruce

I would also add that (1) several stations have already switched over

I believe so. I sent them an e-mail and in the process found out this was a test transmission and that they had also been on 15420. I did not get a chance to check that frequency unfortunately, but the propagation on 31m held up right until the abrupt sign off at 10PM

Oh gee! Rev. Jerimiah Wright did?
Just cuz Obama went to church there for 20 years!!???
....but but but......
But I thought Obama was a Muslim!
Can you say doublethink? ...as in Orwellian brainwashing?
as in: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Doublethink ?????

New Harris POLL:

http://news.harrisinteractive.com/profiles/investor/ResLibraryView.asp?BzID=1963&ResLibrar
yID=37050&Category=1777

Mar 24, 2010
"Wingnuts" and President Obama

A socialist? A Muslim? Anti-American? The Anti-Christ? Large minorities of Americans hold some "remarkable" opinions

Wingnuts: How the Lunatic Fringe Is Hijacking America.
This Harris Poll seeks to measure how many people are involved.

It finds that Republicans believe that President Obama:
* Is a socialist (67%)
* Wants to take away Americans' right to own guns (61%)
* Is a Muslim (57%)
* Wants to turn over the sovereignty of the United States (51%)
* Has done many things that are unconstitutional (55%).
* Was not born in the United States and so is not eligible to be president (45%)
* Is a "domestic enemy" (45%)

My, what whacko, brainwashed dittohead parrots you guys are.
How did THAT happen!? Easy:
USA Today/Gallup poll -- RUSH LIMBAUGH is the REPUBLICAN'S LEADER !
asked: "Who speaks for the Republican party today?"

LIMBAUGH...In every catigory: Both Republicans, Dems agree.
Dick Cheney is number two. That's right, Limbaugh & Cheney.
www.gallup.com/poll/120806/Limbaugh-Gingrich-Cheney-Seen-Speaking-GOP.aspx

BUT WAIT! there's more:

Differences by education

These replies are also strongly correlated with education. The less education people have had the more likely they are to believe all of these statements. Consider these differences between those with no college education and those with post-graduate education:

* He is a socialist (45% and 20%)
* He wants to take away Americans' right to own guns (45% and 19%)
* He is a Muslim (43% and 9%)
* He was not born in the United States so is not eligible to be president (32% and 7%)
* He is a racist (28% and 9%)
* He is anti-American (27% and 9%)
* He is doing many of the things Hitler did (24% and 10%).

After reviewing these findings, John Avlon comments, "These new numbers are shocking but not surprising – they detail the extent to which Wingnuts are hijacking our politics. This poll should be a wake-up call to all Americans about the real costs of using fear and hate to pump up hyper-partisanship. We are playing with dynamite by demonizing our president and dividing our country in the process. Americans need to remember the perspective that Wingnuts always forget – patriotism is more important than partisanship."

So what?

So what indeed! These responses recall a favorite saying of our founder Lou Harris that "when you don't want to publish a poll finding you dislike, you should get out of the business." The very large numbers of people who believe all these things of President Obama help to explain the size and strength of the Tea Party Movement, a topic that will be addressed in another Harris Poll in a few days time.

You might want to have a look here at reviews on the G3:

http://www.eham.net/reviews/detail/8447

Apparently, the Synch is not well-implemented, although it appears to be sideband-selectable. If that is a feature you feel is important, this may not be the right radio for you. AFAIK, the 750 does not have the S-AM at twice the price. Why every receiver $160 and up built nowadays does not have this feature, I have no idea.

There are few receivers out there new these days that give you everything you need for less than $1,500; not sure why the radio companies cannot get it right. I wish you the best of fortune, whatever your decision.

I heard this station again this afternoon/evening (30 March 2010) at 0115 - with a good solid carrier S-5 to S-8 carrier, not much noise or fading at all, but practically no audio to speak of. Either they are greatly undermodulated or else the sidebands were somehow being attenuated in the ether while the carrier came on through. If this station had the same level of audio most anyone else has with this signal level, it would have been armchair copy. Anyway, couldn't stick around long enough to wait for improvement - my offspring was in a HS band concert this evening, and he gets priority :-)

Didn't the last Homeland Security Head under Bush have a few illegals working in his home? He wasn't alone, if memory serves and if Ford or GM felt they could get away with it, they too would switch. Overnight.

Greed is what causes the illegals to be hired and it's business that keeps them in the country.

Get a morality based profit model and the problem disappears. Think about that when you're getting those estimates for landscaping.

There is no Progressive format. There is Progressive CONTENT. But Not a Progressive format.

Progressive content in the US has existed since the US. What set Air America apart from the current, previous, and future content, is that they put politics before the sound business model. It's been demonstrated multiple times that progressive content may exist in a profitable business model. Air America's undoing is that they did not establish a working business model before they opened the doors.
Had they done THAT, they would be in business, today.

Several things they did that were their undoing, of which the most significant: They did not build their network based on a stable of broadcasters. Of their prime players, only Randi Rhodes was a broadcaster. And she was the only one who had made a commitment to Radio as a career. Al Franken, the anchor of the network, went on to say...on the air, no less...repeatedly that he had only signed a short term contract, and did not know how long he would be remaining in Radio.

Radio audiences are based on longevity, and loyalty. Radio viablity is based in the ability of advertisers to be found to support the operation. That support requires a solid listener base to attract advertisers. And Franken made no secret that he was counting the days. A listener base will not form around a host who will not be there at the end of a short term contract. An advertiser base will not form without a listener base, nor a solid and stable operation. Franken was the Big Fish at AAR. He set a tone. He established a foundation. And his repeated comments about the temporary nature of his presence there prevented the formation of both listener and advertiser commitment at the outset. It also prevented his stablemates from making a commitment, as well. And Air America was doomed before it launched, as a result.

By comparison, Rush, Hannity, Beck and their contemporaries are broadcasters first. They've made a commitment to both the medium and the listener. They understand that Radio IS after all a business. And they operate their shows as a business: Providing content FOR SALE. Advertisers can sign on with some confidence that there will be at least an attempt at stability. And though the content can be as raving and pedantic as AAR's, the business model is solid.

It's also easier to sell Conservative Radio, because of the nature of Radio. But that's not to say that Progressive Radio can't be sold. It can. It's just not as easy.

By contrast, NPR, and its similars, also have a working business model. They, too, provide content for sale. The difference is that NPR and its similars provide content for sale to local stations, and the stations raise funds to pay for it by asking for donations from their listener. Further operating funds are provided by corporate grants and donations, and grants from public foundations. But the business model is still sound. And the business model was in place BEFORE the launch of the content.

Air America simply didn't do that.

Progressive content has been around for centuries. It can, it does, and it will survive. Because it was, is, and will be, content offered FOR SALE. Air America forgot that simple element. And failed. Conservative Talk Radio is operated as RADIO: as a business first. It's content provided by broadcasters, who know and understand the Business of Radio, for sale. Air America's founders were not broadcasters. Air America's support staff and manglement were not broadcasters. Air America's talent were mostly not broadcasters. And without that understanding about how broadcasting works, they failed before they launched.

The failure of Air America was the failure of Air America's business model. Run by broadcasters, as a business first, there may have been a different outcome.

much more varied, just eating veggies and -eliminating- meat, fish and fowl? Sorry, but that seems contradictory.

more fun? Why is it "more fun" to cook one thing than another? Cooking is cooking, parts is parts.

What about that cruel and inhumane treatment of vegetables? You are killing them (a living thing), boiling them, eating them.

Plants have feelings too, ya know. How would -you- like to be mowed down in the prime of life?

If you wish to be a vegetarian, so be it. But meat is just another food group along with fish, fowl and vegetables. Humans have been eating meat for millenia, since the first cave man speared a woolly mammoth. Meat has stood the human race in good stead for tens of thousands of years. (Everything in moderation, of course. I'm not recommending you slam down two pounds of bacon in a sitting).

ARLP012 Propagation de K7RA

Average daily sunspot numbers were down nearly five points this week to 24.6. New sunspot group 1057 appeared on March 23, and by March 24 was thirty-eight times its original size. It covered ten one-millionths of the solar hemisphere on Tuesday, and on Wednesday it grew to 380 one millionths.

On Thursday new sunspot group 1058 appeared, and the total area for both groups expanded to 401 millionths of the solar hemisphere. Total sunspot area has not been this large since February 8, when the total was 460 one-millionths. (The numbers given for Wednesday are a revision of the numbers for the same day given in yesterday's ARRL Letter.)

The largest area covered during all of 2009 was 380 on October 29, followed by 310 on December 18. March 23 through April 3 2008 was a period of very strong sunspot activity, and on March 26-28 the area covered by three sunspots was 520, 510 and 410 one-millionths of the solar surface.

The Spring Equinox was last Saturday, March 20, and HF radio conditions are good, with quiet geomagnetic conditions. NOAA and the U.S. Air Force predict solar flux of 88 for today, March 26, and 89 for March 27-31. This is higher than the average solar flux for this week, 84.2, and last week, 87.6, and the week before, 78.6.

Our reporting week for data at the end of this bulletin is always Thursday through Wednesday, and we haven't reported a weekly average solar flux above 89 since Propagation Forecast Bulletin ARLP007, which had 90.6 on February 11-17.

NOAA predicts a bit more geomagnetic activity (but not much!) rising from a planetary A index of 5 on March 26 to 7 on March 27 and 8 for March 28-31.

Geophysical Institute Prague expects quiet to unsettled conditions March 26, quiet March 27-29, quiet to unsettled March 30-31, and a return to quiet for April 1, the day that NOAA predicts a planetary A index of five. Last week for the first time we presented the trailing 50-day average of daily sunspot numbers, 27.34. This week it is 28.18.

This weekend is the CQ World Wide WPX SSB Contest. HF conditions should be good.

Harry Gross, KC2FYJ of Mineola, New York wrote in with questions about the numbering of sunspot groups, which is different than the sunspot number.

Harry asked, "First, what's the scheme (e.g. why is a particular group referred to as 1055, for example)? Is it the 55th group seen in 2010 perhaps? Or is it something more esoteric?"

"Second, how do you decide that a particular group is 'returning?' I presume it's because it's circled the Sun and is returning on the other side again. However, how can you be certain it's the same group, since there is a wide (but now narrowing, thanks to STEREO) area were we can't observe on the far side of the Sun? Couldn't the group have disappeared, and a new one formed in its place?"

The sunspot groups are numbered consecutively, starting with 0, and when group 9999 emerges, the next new group will be 0 again. I have also seen them expressed as five digits, so the current sunspot 1057 this week would be 11057.

If you go to http://spaceweather.com and look at the Archives section in the upper right, change the date to June 15, 2002 and click View.

Note the numbers on the solar image on the left side are up in the 9990+ range. Now click "Forward" on the upper right to advance the date to June 16. Note the piece about "Sunspot Zero." I don't know why the image doesn't show sunspot 2. Perhaps it emerged, was numbered, then faded in less than a day. Perhaps that is also why paging backward does not produce sunspot 9999.

It looks like we went from group 321 to 1057 over the past seven years. If sunspot groups were to continue emerging at the same rate, which has been slow recently, it could take us until April 14, 2095 to reach group 0 again, a pretty rough guess. That will be less than a month and a half short of my birthday at age 143, perhaps around Solar Cycle 32. I get my information second hand regarding which groups are returning, and do no direct observation myself.

I think they can be recognized possibly from magnetic signatures, and also the timing. It takes about 27.5 days for a complete solar rotation, but it varies with latitude, because the Sun is a big ball of (very hot) gas. At the equator the period is less than 26 days, and toward the poles it is about 36 days. A few references on this can be found on the web at, http://tinyurl.com/yhxjr5g, http://tinyurl.com/yktkwrq and http://tinyurl.com/ykguzeo.

John Buttolph, N1JB of Lake Elmore, Vermont wrote in with information on a Navy map (see http://tinyurl.com/yhpfcwd) showing letter designations for each time zone. Z or Zulu time as we all know is for the prime meridian, or Greenwich Mean Time. But when it is 1200Z, it is 0400U on the West Coast, and 0700R in Newington, Connecticut.

Click on the map for greater detail. John wrote, "The world is divided into 24 time zones, and each is assigned a letter. The U.S. Navy, as well as civil aviation, uses the letter 'Z' (phonetically 'Zulu') to refer to the time at the prime meridian. Proceeding eastward from Greenwich, the zones are designated with the Latin alphabet letters beginning with 'A' or 'Alpha' time. [I do not know why the prime meridian time zone was given the last letter of the alphabet rather than the first!] Not all letters of the alphabet are used. For various reasons having to do with population centers and other cultural reasons, the time zones do not strictly follow the meridian lines, and some time zones vary by the half-hour."

Matt Pastorcich, KJ4NBM of Mobile, Alabama was surprised to work VK2JB, John Baylis in Hobart, Tasmania last Saturday, March 20 at 1246z using PSK31 on 20 meters. That isn't a promising time for that 9,300 mile short path route, and Matt was even more surprised to learn that John was running 2 watts into a loop antenna made for 80 meters. Matt uses a vertical. A better time would be 0500z-1000z, or even better would be 30 meters around 0730z-1300z or 40 meters 0800-1200z.

Wolf Urban, DK8MZ in Fuerstenfeldbruck Germany wrote to comment on 15 meters. Nearly two weeks ago, on Saturday, March 13 he worked Rob Struppeck, V73RS on the southernmost island of Kwajalein Atoll. Wolf uses a TH3 Yagi at 12 meters high, and said that Rod had a very robust S9 signal on 15 meter SSB.

Wolf thinks this is a hopeful sign, and said, "I can't remember when I last heard such a strong signal from that part of the world, (the most difficult one for the Europeans on the high bands) even during periods of much higher solar activity!"

Bruce,

Listen to 15745 from 0100UT on. Last night I heard a YL early followed by almost 1/2 hour of instrumental music then a preacher in English until about 0145UT then a YL again with what sounded like an address in Sri Lanka given. Fade out after 0155UT. Could it be SLBC is carrying TWR? Or is it just a religious broadcaster camped out there. The only thing listed on 15745 is SLBC. Could not compare to 9770 since Turkey was on the frequency.

I know Thailand was propagating on this band. They were s9+10db on 15275 from 0000 to 0028UT. Maybe you wil have better luck being on the west coast. If we get a repeat in propagation you should have reception through to 0200UT and maybe you can get a positive ID.

Good DXing

3965. Liberty Net for Week of March 27 – April 3

Liberty Net for Week of March 27 ï¿½ April 3

http://3950.net/2010/03/liberty-net-for-week-of-march-27-april-3/

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

A WIDE range of viewpoints emerged on the Liberty Net this session, and itï¿½s no longer possible to classify the Net as either of the ï¿½leftï¿½ or the ï¿½right.ï¿½ Critics of the oligarchy come from far more than one perspective.

The Liberty Net is on the air every Saturday night at 10PM Eastern Time on ï¿½ or near, usually within 10 kHz or less ï¿½ 3950 kHz SSB.

Begun in 1974, the Liberty Net is an amateur radio tradition. Itï¿½s the longest-running discussion net in amateur radio. Here are a few highlights from this weekï¿½s recording:

ï¿½ One of safest places you can be, statistically, is a shooting range. And one of the least safe is a swimming pool. So, do we need ï¿½swimming pool controlï¿½ by the federal government? (35 minutes)

ï¿½ Will Obama try to guarantee himself a second term by calling for the legalization of all illegal immigrants? (38 minutes)

ï¿½ Is the breakup of the United States a real possibility, once the dollar loses much of its value and oil becomes virtually unavailable? One good result would be the stalling of the U.S. war machine. (49 minutes)

ï¿½ Apparently some members of the Detroit school board cannot read or write, as dysgenics takes its toll of that once-great city. (1 hour 14 minutes)

ï¿½ Is the Washington regime going to create a phony incident to start a war with Iran in the near future? (1 hour 20 minutes)

ï¿½ Since the criminal elites get their power by manipulating an ignorant electorate, would it not be better to limit the vote to those with more knowledge, education, and intelligence? (1 hour 43 minutes)

ï¿½ Rupert Murdoch (the super-Zionist media oligarch who owns Fox News and the Wall Street Journal) is considering charging for his online content. He should study the example of New Yorkï¿½s Newsday, which tried to do the same thing and ended up with a grand total of three subscribers when their pay site launched. (2 hours 0 minutes)

ï¿½ Soon we will reach a tipping point where millions of Americans will simply decide to have nothing more to do with the Federal Government. And they will starve it. And its wars, its taxes, and its secret police agencies will die out ï¿½ probably after a brief but violent flare-up. (2 hours 9 minutes)

ï¿½ Some banks were told to keep their ï¿½bailoutï¿½ money even when they tried to repay it, so that it can be used to artificially prop up purchases of U.S. Treasury notes when the Chinese and Japanese start fleeing a bad investment. (3 hours 44 minutes)

Check-ins begin at the ten minute mark. Remember, thanks to N2SAG and N2IRJ and W1WCR, you can listen to multiple live Internet streams when the Liberty Net is on the air ï¿½ which almost totally frustrates the jammer stations which, in true Stalinesque fashion, sometimes try to suppress free speech. And, as always, you can download the Net right here at http://3950.net and listen on your mp3 player while jogging, driving, or relaxing.

Those were my reasons and results exactly - today I am 50, fit, hike great! :-) Can't vouch for the intelligence part, though - I became more of a juvenile delinquent ;-)

The main problem is not eating meat, although it is part of the ethical dilemma - the bigger problem is that you cannot feed a planet of 7 billion meat eaters and still be humane, just and not place a hideous burden on the environment.

Interesting - SLBC has been a religious broadcaster, so what you heard is consistent with that history. I have heard SLBC on 19 meters before, and it usually resembles what you describe. I will try 15745 this evening if I get a chance.

0155 is about then the 9770 channel died two nights ago. If the 9770 carried Turkey beginning at 0100, I guess it could have been them (I did not get the new A10 skeds for other languages yet). The deadish carrier would be consistent with VoTurkey.

Thanks!

Very interesting. I have a couple questions about nets, in general. Are there formal FCC rules covering net operations? I notice the net controller talking about reporting jammers to the FCC. I didn't find any net etiquette sites on the web. Was the jammer violating a net rule or just basic ham rules related to breaking in on established connections? Thank you.

I really like this description. It is probably applicable to far more formnats than just political radio, or radio in general for that matter.

It is wasteful to grow meat for food. Just "calories in" vs "calories out" math shows how wasteful. Plus there is a lot of environmental damage involved. The quickest way to reduce greenhouse gasses would be for people to reduce their meat consumption. It could have a dramatic effect in a very short time.

But we lack the courage, as always.

There were numerous studies released during the 60's and 70's detailing the experiments where plants were demonstrated to respond to kind talk, soft music, even specific genre's of music.

This was touted as evidence of consciousness. And some activist papers were published as a result, as well as the formation of some activist groups.

And while it may have something to do with simulation of environmental vibrations in the audio range detectable by the plants for reproductive purposes, it does not suggest consciousness.

Any more than Air America did. :)

Abu Ghraib Torturer Dies in Afghanistan

Former soldier involved in Abu Ghraib abuse dies in Afghanistan bombing

The Washington Post
March 7, 2009

http://www.chicagotribune.com/news/nationworld/chi-afghan-soldier_07mar07,0,7911779.story

Santos Cardona, an Army dog handler involved in the abuse of Iraqi prisoners at Abu Ghraib prison, was determined to continue fighting overseas to erase the stain of his assault conviction, his family members said.

Those closest to him said his passion for doing what he loved in the service of his country led him to try to return to Iraq in 2006, but the military brought him home after his planned deployment was publicized. Late last year, Cardona, 34, got his chance to rejoin the fight.

He traveled to Afghanistan as a government contractor, using a German shepherd to search for improvised explosive devices and weapons stockpiles. On Saturday, Cardona and his dog, Zomie, were killed when his military convoy hit a roadside bomb, according to Cardona's employer and his family.

Cardona's loved ones said he undertook one final year at war to earn money for his daughter, show the military he was good at his job and dispel the cloud caused by the Abu Ghraib photos.

"He wanted to prove that he had nothing to hide," said Steven Acevedo, Cardona's uncle. "He very much believed his job was important, but he was resentful that his president and that his government had turned their back on him and tried to use him as a scapegoat. He was really torn up about that."

Cardona and his tan Belgian Malinois, Duco, were shown in photographs of detainee abuse that surfaced publicly in 2004.

Cardona argued he was ordered to have Duco intimidate high-value detainees at the behest of senior officers ï¿½?? claims supported by court testimony and military records ï¿½?? and jurors acquitted him of all but one charge.

Thanks everyone. I already have a G5 and it is indeed a good radio. But I was playing around with the G3 at radio shack today, they let me take it outside, and it really shines on sideband ham signals, at least in the 14200khz range. I think having a separate USB/LSB switch makes a big difference.. But I didn't have my G5 with me to compare. I really wish I could see a 750 before I make up my mind, but none of the Radio Shacks around here stock the 750.

I'll probably go with the G3 and use the G5 as a bedside radio. The G6 will be my primary portable. The 750 sits in the garage and is good for listening to FM outside.

In part. Also the work of Jagdish Chandra Bose who proposed the concept of a plant nervous system, recording spasmodic responses to shock taxis in plants around 1900.

We did experiments at university with some mimosa-like plants that responded to the touch by folding their leaves. Loud and shrill sounds also produced the same response, although not consistently.
And not in all plants under test. We attributed that to the plant's response mechanism responding to some vibrations, in amplitude and requency, as touch.

Bose also claimed to have found that plants grew more quickly in the presence of soft music and more slowly when exposed to harsh sound. From this, he posited that plants had central nervous systems that could feel pain, perceive and return affection, and interpret intents, and respond to them. Bose's research involved interpretation of changes in cell membranes under various taxes.

These studies, which took place near the turn of the century, were the bases for many of the studies which surfaced in the 60's and 70's tha recommended corn be grown under the gentle strains of Debussey played over huge PA systems in the fields, and the affection of farmers walking through their fields reciting poetry.

May we live in interesting times.

Actually, he was correct. The French don't have a word for 'Filet Mignon' because 'Filet Mignon' is an American recipe, appearing in the mid 1890's.

The French call their filet of tenderloin 'tournedos', and 'filet de bï¿½uf.'

Only in the US are these cuts sold as 'filet mignon.'

Similarly, the English have nothing known as an 'English Muffin.'

As the Italians do not have anything known as 'Italian Salad Dressing.' All salad dressings are French.

Great sites - but the information is now out of date.

Prime Time seems to claim that they have the data published, and as far as I can tell, for EE anyway, it seems to match the real world so far.

"[The] left became so ideologically attached to anti-Americanism and pro-communism and Third Worldism that I believe we have a problem on our hands" - Eldridge Cleaver

A Washington Post columnist by the name of Colbert King recently compared the "Tea Party supporters and their right-wing fellow travelers" to the angry mobs who used threats, intimidation, and even murder to prevent the "landmark civil rights laws" of the 1960s.

http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2010/03/26/AR2010032603335.html

According to King,

The angry '50s and '60s crowds threatened and intimidated; some among them even murdered. That notwithstanding, Americans of goodwill gathered in the White House to witness the signing of landmark civil rights laws.

King reminds his readers that although "[s]choolhouse doors were blocked and little children were demeaned," the "bigots didn't get the last word. Justice rolled down like a mighty river, sweeping them aside."

And while comparing present-day Tea Party anger to the abuse, lies, insults, and vandalism characteristic of yesteryear's George Wallace brigades, King is confident that "progress" today will prevail as it did back in the '60s:

Those angry faces won't go away. But neither can they stand in the way of progress. The mobs of yesteryear were on the wrong side of history. Tea Party supporters and their right-wing fellow travelers are on the wrong side now. It shows up in their faces.

While reflecting on Colbert King's words, I too began to reminisce about some of the violent, angry faces in my own past.

Back in the early 1980s, I was sitting in Wheeler Hall at UC Berkeley with hundreds of other students, waiting rather impatiently to see a man who clearly embodied much of the turmoil, outrage, and overall ethos of the 1960s: ex-Black Panther Eldridge Cleaver.

Cleaver combined his roles as radical philosopher and warrior for the oppressed to serve the Black Panthers as Minister of Information shortly after his release from Folsom prison in 1966. Cleaver hit the national stage in 1968 when he published a collection of his prison writings, Soul on Ice, which combines a visceral hatred for America with black liberation theology, admissions about "insurrectionary" rape, a spiritual odyssey, and a search for personal meaning in a racist environment.

Perhaps Shane Stevens of The Progressive captured the essence of Cleaver's book best when he said in a review, "The hell is there, and its name is America." Indeed, the raw power of Cleaver's remarkable and revealing eloquence in Soul on Ice made him a favorite on college campuses and also among legions of leftist intellectuals.

I read Soul on Ice as a teenager and was floored by the radical difference between the violent and turbulent streets of Cleaver's young life and the strawberry fields and apple orchards that girded the quiet dirt roads I strolled along during my own youth on a farm.

Cleaver's life took yet another violent turn in April of 1968 when he helped organize an ambush of the Oakland city police. The resulting shootout left fellow Panther Bobby Hutton dead, two police officers injured, and Cleaver charged with attempted murder. To avoid more time in prison, Cleaver left the country for Cuba and other communist destinations such as North Korea, China, and the Soviet Union, where he was heralded as a celebrity by authorities in each government, who also helped provide for his living.

By 1975, however, Cleaver had learned firsthand about the crushing weight of the state in the communist world. He experienced a personal transformation that left him longing for life back in America. And despite being vilified and called a traitor by his colleagues on the left, Cleaver began openly defending American values and traditions in speeches and interviews upon his return.

Sitting in the crowd at UC Berkeley some years after Cleaver's repatriation, I again thought about what this compelling and exotic man might be able to teach me about America. When the audience began hissing and sneering, I realized that Cleaver had arrived.

It has been over twenty-five years, but I still remember Cleaver's imposing figure strolling across the stage, unfazed by heckling and howling that met him from some in the audience. As Cleaver rested his large, black hands on the podium, I heard voices in the back snapping with anger and calling out in rapid succession, "You're a traitor, Cleaver!"

As I remember, Cleaver began his speech by defending the conservative American values of self-reliance and entrepreneurship and warning against the dangers of statism and collectivism. Shortly into his speech, however, as the heckling reached intolerable levels, dozens of protesters began marching down the aisles of the auditorium, headed for the stage.

Sitting near the podium, I turned to watch as some of the marchers leaped onto the stage, dragging a giant American flag that had been squeezed into a thick noose. After they swatted the stage several times with Old Glory, I remember them stomping the flag with their boots and accompanying the chaos with an eerie chant of some kind.

Cleaver stood above me only a few rows away, sizing up the anarchy as it unfolded around him. What I'll never forget is the kind of smooth composure this larger-than-life figure displayed despite the impending threat -- like a panther, as one protester would soon learn to his dismay.

Realizing the inaction or disappearance of the campus police, the apparent ringleader of the mob raced over to a table near the podium, grabbed a pitcher of water, and splashed its contents over Cleaver's face and chest. With the reflexes of an experienced prizefighter, Cleaver knocked the angry young man clear off the stage with a simple but frightfully quick jab, and then he waited calmly for more.

While the leftist thugs rioting near Cleaver had second thoughts about their next move, the campus police finally arrived and cleared the stage after a short scuffle. Cleaver continued speaking, but I was so overwhelmed by the rapid succession of violent events that my memory even now leaves me somewhat helpless beyond that point.

Several years later, Cleaver met with the editors of Reason Magazine for a profound, enlightening, and at times rather poignant interview about recent American history, the dangers of welfare-statism, the role of ideology in politics, and what he learned while living under socialist rule abroad.

http://reason.com/archives/1986/02/01/an-interview-with-eldridge-cle

Cleaver learned that most importantly, "it is a quality of human beings that when they are trying to tear something down[,] they don't pay enough attention" to the relationship between ideology and "the form of government that comes out of that ideology." Having studied Marxism "on paper" as a Black Panther, Cleaver was ill-prepared to realize how efficiently the state manages to crush the very individual Cleaver himself had intended to liberate.

When asked by the Reason editors whether government welfare programs end up harming or helping its recipients, Cleaver had this to say:

My life, I think, spans the whole era of the welfare state. I was born in 1935. I remember when people were ashamed to be on welfare and receive state aid and all that, but we developed a situation where black people to a large degree and a lot of other groups such as elderly people, children, and a lot of poor white people ended being harnessed by political forces, especially the Democratic Party. In return for the federal appropriations that we are now dependent upon, our leaders were obligated to get out the black vote for the Democratic Party. So this put us in a negative relationship with the economic system. We were dependent upon the federal budget -- a very precarious situation, because when the political winds change, we get our living cut off.

Cleaver believed that the solution to this kind of dependency on the Democratic Party is a series of private-sector entities that help bring these groups into a more positive relationship with the economic system:

If we do it through the state, like, say, President Roosevelt did with the New Deal, you augment the power of the state. ... I don't want to see government get control of the economic system as a whole and the livelihood of all the people, because I have seen that, and it's a no-no.

Since Cleaver's "great, burning desire" was to "help enlarge human freedom," he was able to recognize the debilitating effects that Democrat welfare-statism had on the black population here at home.

Eldridge Cleaver passed away in 1998, but today, writers like Colbert King are likening Americans who are simply alarmed, as Cleaver was, at the growth of Big Brother to the racists, bigots, and murderers who stood in the way of civil rights legislation. This is a deplorable and disingenuous charge, since the Tea Party phenomenon is simply aimed at thwarting the rapid augmentation of the state, not at any of the civil rights legislation.

As Eldridge Cleaver understood, when the individual is crushed, so is his sense of self-respect and self-reliance. Since LBJ's Great Society initiatives, billions of dollars have been spent augmenting the state in relation to the individual lives of most black Americans. Is Colbert King happy with the results? Is socialized medicine as important to the black community as the staggering numbers of children who grow up without a father in the home?

Back in 1947, Mahatma Gandhi was asked a question about the prospect of a state-controlled economy in newly independent India. Gandhi replied:

I look upon an increase of the power of the state with the greatest fear, because although while apparently doing good by minimizing exploitation, it does the greatest harm to mankind by destroying individuality, which lies at the root of all progress. We know of so many cases where men have adopted trusteeship [charity], but none where the State has really lived for the poor.

It is the "fear of freedom and responsibility," said Tzvetan Todorov, that creates "the attraction of a totalitarian system."

Listen to the panther, Colbert King. If you think you're on the right side of history, then Eldridge Cleaver may have already seen your future.

As Democrats, after a Sunday rally on the Capitol grounds, marched to the House hand-in-hand to vote for health-care reform, tea partiers reportedly shouted the "N-word" at John Lewis and another black congressman. A third was allegedly spat upon. And Barney Frank was called a nasty name.

Tea partiers deny it all. And neither audio nor video of this alleged incident has been produced, though TV cameras and voice recorders were everywhere on the Hill.

Other Democrats say their offices were vandalized and they've been threatened. A few received, and eagerly played for cable TV, obscene phone calls they got.

If true, this is crude and inexcusable behavior. And any threat should be investigated. But Democrats are also exploiting these real, imaginary or hoked-up slurs to portray themselves as political martyrs and to smear opponents as racists and bigots.

This is the politics of desperation.

Majority Whip James Clyburn accuses Republicans of "aiding and abetting ... terrorism." New York Times columnist Frank Rich compared the tea-party treatment of Democrats to Nazi treatment of the Jews during Kristallnacht:

"How curious that a mob fond of likening President Obama to Hitler knows so little about history that it doesn't recognize its own small-scale mimicry of Kristallnacht."

Kristallnacht, "Crystal Night," the "Night of Broken Glass," was the worst pogrom in Germany since the Middle Ages. Synagogues were torched and hundreds of businesses smashed. Shattered glass covered the streets. Women were assaulted and men beaten and murdered. After that terrible night, half the Jews remaining in Germany fled.

To compare a brick tossed through the window of a congressional office and two shouted slurs to Kristallnacht suggests a growing paranoia on the left about the populist right.

Not since the Civil Rights Act of 1964 made "some Americans run off the rails," said Rich, have we seen anything like this.

Was Rich awake in 1964? Because it wasn't the right that went off the rails. The really big riot in 1964 was in Harlem, lasting five days, with 500 injured and as many arrested. The Watts riot in 1965, Detroit and Newark in 1967, Washington, D.C., and 100 other cities in 1968, all bringing troops into American cities, were not the work of George Wallace populists or Barry Goldwater conservatives. They were the work of folks who went "all the way with LBJ."

Nor was it Young Americans for Freedom that burned ROTC buildings, vandalized professors' offices, toted the guns at Cornell or took over Columbia in 1968. And it was not the Birchers who set off that 1970 explosion in the Greenwich Village townhouse that killed three radicals and aborted the terrorist bombing of the NCO club at Fort Dix.

No, this was not the New Right. This was the New Left, and it was Obama not John Boehner who used to "pal around" with one of the boys who did the Pentagon and Capitol Hill bombings.

As for calling Barney Frank a naughty name, that is not nice. But one wonders what Rich thought of the students marching under Viet Cong flags chanting, about the man who signed that Civil Rights Act, "Hey, hey, LBJ, how many kids did you kill today?" and, "Ho, Ho, Ho Chi Minh, the NLF is going to win," when American boys were dying in the hundreds every week fighting the communist NLF?

The 1967 attack on the Pentagon, where thousands tried to break through military police to get into the building, was the work of left-wing radicals. Did the tea-party folks who chanted, "Kill the bill," outside the House behave worse than that?

Some of us recall the anarchy of May Day 1971, when 15,000 leftists tried to shut down Washington on a Monday morning by rolling logs onto Canal Road, smashing car windows, blocking traffic circles and wilding in Georgetown. Most wound up behind a chain-link fence at the Armory.

How many were arrested on Capitol Hill Sunday a week ago?

Not one tea partier, man or woman.

The "mass hysteria" of the tea-party right, writes Rich, is at root about race. "By 2012 ... non-Hispanic white births will be in the minority. The tea party is virtually all white. ... Their anxieties about a rapidly changing America are well-grounded."

Rich is implying that when America's white majority disappears, in 2042 according to 2008 Census Bureau projections, the day of the white conservative is over.

Given the rise in ethnic consciousness among all Americans, Rich may be right. But it is not just white folks who want illegal aliens deported and legal immigration curtailed, while 25 million of our own are out of work or underemployed.

A Zogby poll for the Center for Immigration Studies found that 56 percent of Hispanics, 57 percent of Asian-Americans and 68 percent of African-Americans think legal immigration is too high.

If the tea-party folks think it is leftist elites who detest and wish to be rid of the America they grew up in and love, they are right.

Pat Buchanan was twice a candidate for the Republican presidential nomination and the Reform Party's candidate in 2000. He is also a founder and editor of The American Conservative. Now a political analyst for MSNBC and a syndicated columnist, he served three presidents in the White House, was a founding panelist of three national TV shows, and is the author of seven books.

Just how big is the stimulus package? Well for one, it has doubled the size of the House of Representatives, according to recovery.gov, which says that funds were distributed to 440 congressional districts that do not exist.

Listened for Sri Lanka on 15745. Transmitter came on for 30 seconds at 0102UT. Off then on again at 0110UT. Appeared to be just a carrier or signal was too weak for audio to be heard. Carrier weakened and the band looked pretty dead so gave up at 0140UT.

Heh - my experience sort of matches yours - I tuned in at about 0055 - heard a faint carrier on 15747.1, which then gave out completely at 0102, then not a peep thereafter...dead for several minutes (probably 5 minutes). This was well before sunset - so I took a 1-hour bike ride to just before local sunset, came back and lo! a weak carrier spot on 15745 at about 0215, just before local sunset. I listened for several minutes, but only rarely did I hear a snippet of voice on LSB/USB, always male. I gave up after about 0240 when the carrier became even weaker and no more voice was audible at all.

...and that's all she wrote!

This is a tentative; I'm not sure what it means exactly.

PERU, Radio Victoria, 6019.28 kHz, 18 March 2010, 0445-0530z.

I sent a reception report in Spanish, and requested a QSL or verification, by post with $3 US specifically identified for return postage to:

Radio Victoria, via Iglesia Pentecostal Dios es Amor
Av. Arica 248,
Breña
Lima, Lima 05,
Perú

I received an e-mail from a Mr. Carlos Cabrera Torres at R. Victoria - here is his response, translated from Spanish:

"Dear Bruce Jensen: It was gratifying for us to read [your] report tuning our [Emisora] Radio Victoria, which operates from the city of Lima, capital of Peru, South America.

"We are gratified and very pleased to know that our sound waves from reaching your country and indeed also that programming is your pleasure. You can send your report to us at: radiovictoria@terra.com or to this email. and thus extend our relationship.

"We also take this [opportunity] to thank [you] for [your] report which is very useful for us. From now part of our circle of friends of Radio Victoria. Without further ado, Sincerely,

CARLOS CABRERA TORRES
DIRECTOR DE PRENSA DE RADIOPERIÓDICO NUEVO MUNDO RADIO VICTORIA - 780 Klcs. AM
Of. 424-4321 // 997121896
RPM CLARO: 989077075"

There is absolutely no other detail. So - is this a QSL or verification? I know that R. Victoria has QSLed many times in the past for others - but I am not sure about this message.

Should I resend it to the e-mail?

Any insights appreciated.

On this message, being uncertain as to whether a physical QSL is forthcoming via post, I simply sent another e-mail in Spanish with Sr. Cabrera's e-mail, requesting clarification about whether the signal I heard was in fact Radio Victoria. In my e-mail I included the vital details, so if he responds directly, the facts will be in the e-mail. Maybe the best I can do without being gauche?

OTOH, maybe they'll send a pile of stuff - weirder things have happened!

Operator Bob,

I guess the questions I am asking. Does having separate USB/LSB switch make a difference when listening to sideband signals? Will having separate USB/LSB along with synch detection make that much of a difference trying to listen to weak AM signals both on AM and shortwave?

The Sony 7600-SW also is coming to mind.

Anyone have any hands on with the 7600-SW?

Thanks a mil

Wow! You really don't get it, do you? Most listeners could not possibly give a rats ass about business models or any of your other corporate talk. What listeners want is something interesting. Something they can relate too. And you conveniently left out some facts, as you conservatives are want to do. Mike Malloy was doing progressive talk long before AAR. Ed Shultz was a sportscaster before he became a political talker.

Separate LSB and USB, if properly implemented, makes a big difference. Instead of just providing a beat frequency oscillator (BFO) to allow you to tune in one or another sideband, the separate sideband provision is a more dedicated electronic approach. The result, in my experience, is a much cleaner signal. It definitely helps with weak signals. Does the G5 not do this for you?

The SD for the AM is a nice feature for smoothing out a fading signal. The best of all worlds would allow for a double-sideband Synch along with sideband-selectable synch. This would allow for the greatest versatility when trying to get a good copy on a fading signal. Judicious use of the ssb can get you about the same results, but it isn't quite the same.

Pay attention, please. If you'll read what I actually wrote, I did acknowledge that progressive content predated AAR. And would live long after it. In fact, I led off with this.

I know it's tough. There are no pictures, but please try. Thank you.

Also, though the listeners may not care about he business model, it's the business model that keeps the content on the air. The most interesting content will not survive, if there isn't a business to pay the bills around it.

AAR did many things wrong. Their failure was to believe that they could survive in a commercial environment, without a commercial business model. Once the bills weren't being paid, the content went away.

A format is a structure. Progressive talk is not a format. Talk is a format. News is a format. Progressive Talk is the same format as Conservative Talk...it's Talk. There is no Progressive format.

Actually, in my chef's class at the university, we studied origins of cuts at length. The cut showed up in restaurants in the mid 1890s. In American restaurants.

Which would be after it was introduced to the menu in the 1890's.
Wow, you sound like you went to Chicago public schools.

I have been using 7600G almost daily for ten years now. Not so bad as a portable, the audio a little on the weak side. But it does have synchronous AM and this is really unusual in a portable for under $200. The BFO control is very small and not convenient to use . Very sensitive front end and well designed in the cosmetic department. If the audio is connected to a good amplifier and speakers the result is an unusually clear sound (by SW standards). Sony could have taken this successful receiver and implemented it's circuitry in a tabletop .
One of very few gadjets that is actually worth the price!

I wonder what Entrepreneur thought that up..

You may want to re-examine your Wiki sources. The words first appeared in American print at some early date. There is no mention of the culinary creation being of American origin.

Some others credit the writings of O. Henry, circa 1906, as the original introduction of the term to North Americans. The Oxford dictionary claims a French origin, as do others.

This is turning into a morbid dead meat fest, so with your kind permission, I am now leaving. There are vegetables in the kitchen awaiting an untimely chlorophyll letting.

Perhaps. The significance of the point, however, is that here is no difference as far as Broadcast is concerned between Progressive and Conservative talk. There is nothing fundamentally different in the operation of the radio station, except, perhaps revenues. And even that's not a certainty.

The listener may care. The radio station does not, as long as the spots sell. And the original point of the conversation was the failure of AAR. Which basically went on the air with an agenda, but no way to pay the bills.

That's not a format, either.

I'm sure ninety nine percent of you guys/gal know the name.

I wish Alan would come back under the KIPM monicker. I miss the shows - IMO they were the best put together production of any pirate radio broadcaster.

He was the only pirate that I made sure that nothing was going to stop me from being at the controls when KIPM keyed up.

Does or has any other pirate sent out such elaborate and intricate QSL's like KIPM did? It would take me about a half an hour to just look at it and really study it, I have eight of them in frames and they're as fascinating today as they were the day I got them.

I wonder what the real story was/is with that entire show, I've heard and read the cloak and dagger stories, I just hope one day to hear them again with a new show.

I miss my old pirate station. 102.7 FM, 10 watts, home made 1/4 wave dipole antenna at 20' HAAT. I could be heard on a Sony stereo portable (one of the first stereo boom boxes, no tape) up to 21 miles away. When the FCC came to the door to shut me down, they didn't take my 3rd Phone license or any of my equipment or library. Pretty amazing by today's standards. The local head magazine even wrote an artical about the shutdown. Wish I still had a copy of it, but that's been nearly 40 years ago... wow.. time's fun when your having flies..

dxAce
Michigan
USA

Drake R7, R8, R8A and R8B
70' and 200' wires
GE SR I (2) and II

239 countries heard and 225 QSL'd (veried, for those in Glendale) using the NASWA Country List.

And, as always, don't let your children attend the Sullivan College of Technology & Design.

They've hired at least one dufus who once claimed to have a PhD and lied about being arrested, and who knows, there may be more dufi there.

The 2010 is an interesting story. The ICF-7600D aka ICF-2002 had already came out, which was a much better (and smaller) radio than the ICF-2001. The then obsolete ICF-2001 design was sold to Sangean, who was producing them for Radio Shack and selling them under their own brand name ATS-803.

Meanwhile Sony found that AM stereo had bombed and they had a warehouse full of AM stereo decoder chips with no one interesting in buying them. There were four competing systems of AM stereo and in the US, the FCC let the market decide. The market, as it were, decided that AM stereo was not something they were interested in buying radios for.

A Sony engineer figured out that he could use the AM stereo decoder chip as a selectable sideband synchronous detector chip. The sync detector of the 2010 worked the way it did, because that's how it worked. No one said "let's design a sync detector" and made it that way, it was the other way around.

The 2010 was a combination of the 2002's design, the sync chip and the 2001's ergonomics, put together to produce a new radio. It added some features (such as air band) that were not available before in addition to the sync detector.

Eventually, Sony sold many 2010's and still had more chips, so they "improved" the 2010 and sold that as the SW-77. One of the noticable improvments was 100 memory channels instead of 32. From what I understand shortwave performance was not as good. :-(

Eventually Sony sold out of the chips and since they had been manufactured in the early 1980's was unable to produce more. It would have required a re-design to use manufacturing techniques 20 years newer, which would have required a new radio design and there was not enough demand for it.

BTW, the 7600-GR, is a descendent of the 2002 with similar size and ergonomics.

Ha! I can totally picture you doing that, I remember many of your pirate stories. I am sure there is a psycological "makeup" of ones who take into their own hands the right to say what they want (I think I can figure it out in legalize) and take to the airwaves, I think that is so cool.:-) Gotta be empowering.

One of my fav movies (though it may sound cheesy) is "Pump Up The Volume" with Christian Slater aka; "Happy Harry Hard-on." Though there were many faux paus (sp?) from a radio technical point of view, I thought it really gathered the whole mindset of one that has something to say and doesn't really know how many may be hearing him/her as the mike is keyed...lol.

But ole' 'Happy Harry' started with just a handful of school kids hearing him and of course his message quickly spread throughout his school and into the entire neighbor, hell - it even got him laid.;-)

Excellent Movie IMO. Hope all is well with you BA.

Hey, one more thing. 102.7FM in my area is the biggest and oldest Rock-n-Roll/Heavy Metal station in Cincinnati, Ohio. The station is called WEBN - home of the WEBN Frog and the sponsor of one of the top three firework shows in the USA, which is done on Labor Day.

Every year the pyrotechnics keeps getting better and better and the way every explosion is mixed with music is absolutely incredible. Sooner or later they just won't be able to outdo the previous year, there has to be a ceilng so too speak.

I can just imagine as a young teen listening to WEBN with the buzz on and all the sudden - someone pops onto that station- Ha! They would have had the cops and anyone that could have found the signal out there, you would have famous in Cincinnati.:-)

One of my favorites as well. Bought it originally on Beta HiFi (still have

LONDON ï¿½ The first of several British investigations into the e-mails leaked from one of the world's leading climate research centers has largely vindicated the scientists involved.

The House of Commons' Science and Technology Committee said Wednesday that they'd seen no evidence to support charges that the University of East Anglia's Climatic Research Unit or its director, Phil Jones, had tampered with data or perverted the peer review process to exaggerate the threat of global warming ï¿½ two of the most serious criticisms levied against the climatologist and his colleagues.

It was worth a try. The transmitter condition fits for the suspected location anyway.

Conditions here have really deteriorated today. 21MHz was dead this morning. 20 and 40 meters are not much better. A few guys coming in from Europe and Central America. Have to see if things recover tonight. Thailand on 15.275 makes a good beacon.

Actually, Burr mentioned a while back that his family had caught him looking at Internet porn, so maybe his wife finnaly go rid of him. I'm glad this NG got rid of him, also. Wow, Burr, big announcement, like anyone gives a fuck about you leaving, except that you made most people very happy. Whoever would ever want his 'cummed on' radios? LOL!

Eliminating food groups is -more- varied?

And cooking less food groups is different from cooking multiple food groups how?

All commerical, millitary, etc SSB stations are USB. It seems the only ones who use LSB are hams, and that's only below 9mHz. The US 60 meter ham band (5mHz) is USB only.

Note that within restrictions, the choice of voice mode for hams is optional, except on the US 60 meter band. I don't know if anyone else has it.

When are they going to finally admit that at least parts of the globe are experiencing cooling?

Why do they hold on to the warming theory when for the past 15 years we have had irregular extreme weather patterns here in Northeast PA?

Last year was the worst, it snowed in June, and we had a brief summer until snowing in September!

And lets not forget the resulting flooding of the Delaware River we have had EVERY SPRING for the past 15 YEARS!!! Some of the roads here have been closed off for almost 10 years because of this.

We used to be a popular retirement area. No more - now everyone's retiring to the Carolinas to avoid the cold and terrible roads.

I know why - in the minds of stupid politicians it's easy to create a linkage between pollution and holes in the ozone layer so as to create a platform plank (and money-making scam in the private sphere) where none should exist.

Stop lying! And if you're not, let us know when global warming is expected up here so we can have the permanent summers we so desperately want! Or at least a normal spring beginning in March!

Tell me about it.

The last 'all-veggie' picnic up at the Planetarium turned into a switchblade fight. I'll have a chance to redeem myself tonight. There's gonna be something called a 'chicken run' up on Thunder Road.

4059. Meet Another One of Harry Reid's 'Rent-a-Thugs': Edward 'Eddie' Gering

When thousands of peaceful, Tea Party protestors came to Harry Reid's hometown of Searchlight, Nev. last Saturday, you would have thought that the favorite son of this hardscrabble, mining town would garner tons of local support. Not so. Members of IBEW Local 357 were called to action to agitate the crowd and, as we've previously shown, to hurl eggs at the busses carrying them.

No longer just a face in the crowd… ladies and gentleman this proud Harry Reid supporter is Edward "Eddie" Gering. And like his sister in the struggle Alvivon "Bon Bon" Hurd, he is not just a random loudmouth with a picket sign. No, he's actually the Vice President of Local 357. He's one heartbeat away from the Presidency of Harry Reid's favorite union.

According to UnionFacts.com, Gering makes over $111,000 a year to look after his brothers. Not bad, Eddie. Is standing on the side of a desert road screaming support for Harry Reid and disdain for your fellow Americans who are exercising their constitutional rights in a peaceful and orderly way part of your job description, or were you "going the extra mile" last Saturday?

Your incredibly handsome salary paid for by the hard-earned dues of your brothers and sisters is especially remarkable considering the average annual salary in the state of Nevada is under $33,000.

I bet the public would also find it interesting to find out that the Local 357 Pension Fund is in deep trouble. As of 2007 (before the recession) they were under-funded by 35%! Per Federal law they were required to notify their members of the problem and the fund is now in a ten-year "Funding Improvement" period. Hope that goes well for your sake, Eddie. With the salary you are currently hauling in, you are due for a nice, fat pension. Good thing your health plan isn't in line for one of those "Cadillac Taxes" that your favorite Senator voted for. Nope, that tax is only going to the non-union folks in your state. Whew, dodged that bullet, didn't you?

A sync detector is not designed to be used on an SSB signal. It is no wonder that you have some difficulty.

A sync detector works by locking onto the carrier of the signal. In SSB there is no carrier.

Considering that the Kahn system used independent sidebands there was

But they had the chips for the 7600G/GR, so having a chip to make the sports formats. Rock music formats, country formats, jazz formats,

Bruce,

My G5 can do SSB but it's via a fine tune knob. Not separate USB/LSB.
I can't really complain about the G5, I think I just want a new toy to play with.

Now my G6, I can only get in USB signals, it just won't work with anything on LSB. Weird.

In SSB there is no carrier at all, you seem to be saying that there is.

The common AM mode (DSB modulation with carrier) has a carrier, modulated or not. SSB is nothing with no modulation and one sideband only when there is modulation.

True as a steady tone is just like a carrier. Because it may look like one does not mean it is.

Of course not, it would make no sense.

However, if your radio has USB/LSB selectable sync modes, then the only difference between that and SSB is the injected carrier to the product detector is either phase locked, or not.

Actually, if you had been paying attention, you would know that almost everybody already knows that some areas are cooling, warming, getting drier, getting wetter, etc - the term is "climate change" or "climate forcing," "global warming" is a misnomer that is perpetuated by people for whom it pays to cause misinformation to persist.

I have no idea what the ozone hole connection is at this late date - sounds like you just woke up from 20 years ago.

I hope you get your permanent summer - Death Valley is so delightful, everybody should be allowed to enjoy it.

No cop-out involved, just dislike feeding trolls.

I stated that MY "diet became much more varied", which it most dramatically did. If you are too slow to grasp the inference that is your problem not mine. If you need further explanation see

Nor can I stop tap dancing lest I step into one of the copious steaming piles of excrement you regularly dump into this group. Try contributing something radio related more than occasionally, your noise to signal ratio is unacceptable.

Now troll along, you've received all the attention I am going to give

A hamburger joint, figures. Personally I haven't touched any salad dressing since reading the Reverend Jesse Jackson's autobiography in which he boasted of spitting and peeing into salad dressing dispensers when he worked as a busboy at a restaurant patronized by all white customers. It was an act of civil disobedience he crowed, a "non violent" action he is very proud of to this day. He related in detail how much delight he took in watching "whitey slurping up the salad dressing" he had just desecrated with his body fluids.

In fact I don't dine out at all, I've seen too much undercover video of what goes on in the kitchens of eating establishments. Thankfully I am an excellent cook and enjoy doing so.

Actually, heard a ham on 40m yesterday morning using USB. Not illegal, but unconventional. Seemed odd, why would he do that? Must have wanted some privacy ;-)

Band allocations and time zone conversions for the USA. Includes broadcast bands used outside the USA. For multi-use bands, primary usage is shown. Some stations operate outside official bands. Information is from Oct 2008 FCC rules and Sep 2009 NTIA manual, see Chapter 4 of:
http://www.ntia.doc.gov/osmhome/redbook/redbook.html

Frequencies are in kHz. Usual spacing in shortwave broadcast bands is 5 kHz. Frequencies above 10000 kHz tend to propagate better during the day; frequencies below 10000 kHz tend to propagate better at night.

Phone line as SW antenna

WARNINGS AND DISCLAIMERS

Connecting unapproved devices to phone lines may be illegal in your area.
Telephone lines present a potential shock hazard. Do not use this antenna for transmitting. Use at your own risk.

INTRODUCTION

This article describes how to use a phone line as a shortwave receiving antenna. Performance will vary depending on the kind of phone line you have. Overhead lines usually make okay antennas, while underground lines | usually don't. Phone lines carrying DSL service may be unsuitable because | DSL operates over a wide spectrum. A phone line antenna will generally pick up more power line noise than a dedicated antenna, so don't expect to | use it for DX work. Nevertheless, I found that it outperformed the | telescopic whip antennas built into many portables.

A reader sent in this suggestion: If you're concerned about connecting the phone line directly to the receiver, try wrapping the phone cord several times around the receiver's telescopic whip antenna instead.
Performance may not be as good as a direct connection, but it will probably be better than the whip antenna by itself.

Someone else wrote asking about lightning protection. I haven't thought much about it because thunderstorms are rare in my area. Most phone lines have lightning arrestors on them where they enter the house, but the lightning arrestors may pass enough energy during a lightning strike damage a receiver. My suggestion is to disconnect the antenna when not in use if you experience frequent thunderstorms.

HOW TO DO IT

The simplest connection is a single capacitor between the phone line and receiver. The capacitor eliminates all phone line voltages, including | ringing, so that they will not harm the receiver. The capacitor should
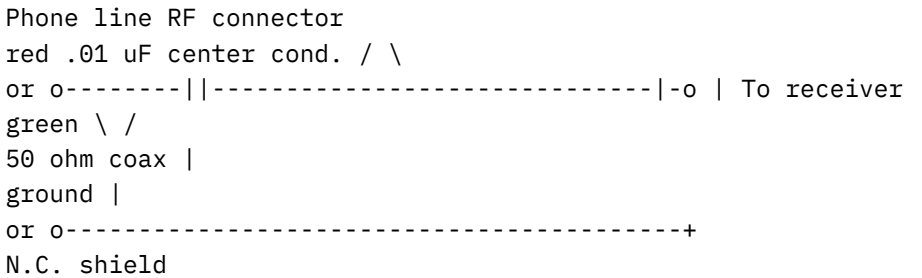
| be rated 250 volts or higher.



N.C. = no connect. I originally connected the phone line ground (yellow wire) to this terminal, but reception was better without it (if you do this, play it safe and put a .01 uF capacitor in series). If another ground is available, you can connect it to this terminal.

If you are picking up local AM or FM radio stations on the shortwave bands, it is likely that your receiver is overloaded. Inexpensive and portable receivers usually lack the filtering needed to eliminate this interference, but you can make your own filters. Filters can also be | purchased from shortwave dealers (see below for recommendations).

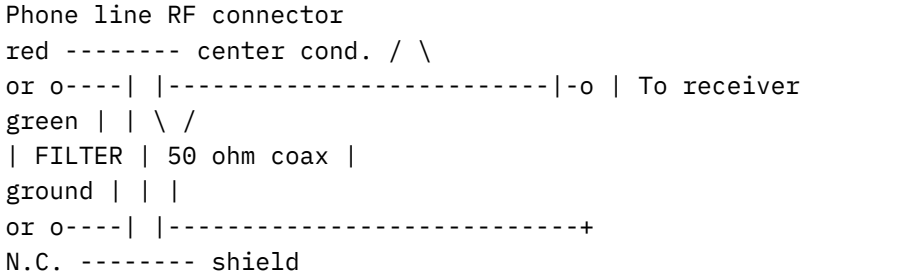
A high-pass filter can be used to remove signals below the shortwave bands. It rejects interference from local AM stations and presents a high impedance to the phone line at audio frequencies so that the phone line remains balanced.

A low-pass filter can be used to remove signals above the shortwave bands. It rejects interference from FM and TV stations, as well as VHF 2-way radio transmitters. If you use both filters, connect the output of the first filter to the input of the second (don't forget to connect their ground terminals together). It doesn't matter which filter is connected first.

These filters also work well with random wire antennas. Just connect the antenna in place of the phone line.

The filter(s) should be connected to the phone line in this manner:



| RECOMMENDED FILTERS
| If you don't want to make your own filters, the following have good | performance, are well-built and affordable:
|
| Model 400 BCB interference filter (3.5 MHz highpass)

| Model 420 HF lowpass filter (30 MHz lowpass)
| http://www.iceradioproducts.com/filtersrf.html#3
| (scroll down a bit to see the model 420)
| If you have a random-wire antenna, the following unit will provide | impedance matching and lightning protection (connect antenna to 450-ohm | terminal):

| Model 182A beverage matching unit

FILTER PLANS

The original credit for the high-pass and low-pass filters goes to Paul Blumstein and John Shalamskas, respectively. Edited versions of their articles are included here:

Date: 09 Jan 91 00:54:08 GMT
From: paulb@harley.TTI.COM (Paul Blumstein)
Subject: BC Band Hi-Pass Filter

The following ascii-schematic diagram is a high pass filter that will filter out Broadcast Band (MW) stations. I found it a great boon to my shortwave listening since local MW stations overload my ATS-803A front end & appear in SW, especially with a long antenna.

If you remember my antenna saga, I went from 50 feet to 150 feet & had overload problems causing me to cut back to 50 feet. (Even at 50 feet, I still have some MW interference). I took the advice of Gary Coffman and looked up filters in the ARRL Handbook. With the filter in place, I intend to try to increase my antenna length again.

Anywho, here is the filter, for interested parties.

--------||---+----||-----+----||-----------
} }
{ {
} }
-------------+-----------+-----------------
```

The outer capacitors are 1500 pf ceramic disks.
The inner capacitor is 820 pf ceramic disk.
The squiggly things are coils (two total). Each one is 2.7 uh.
(a close value will do).

From: bill@videovax.tv.tek.com (William K. McFadden)
Subject: Re: BC Band Hi-Pass Filter

I built the filter that Paul Blumstein posted recently and measured it on a gain-phase analyzer. Here are its characteristics:

100 kHz -120dB
500 kHz -68dB

1000 kHz -38dB
1600 kHz -15dB
2100 kHz -3dB

The source and load impedances were 50 ohms. Because the filter has five elements, the attenuation is 30dB per octave. The measurements confirmed this.

This filter seems to be a good compromise between interference attenuation and passband response. There is very little attenuation in the 120m band and above. It could use a little more attenuation at the upper end of MW, which could be done with more stages or a higher cutoff frequency. Alternatively, you could build two of these filters and put them in series. (Since two 1500pF capacitors in series are really 750pF, you could eliminate one cap.)

Just for fun, I put 470 ohms in series with the input to see how the filter performed with an antenna mismatch. The response was:

100 kHz -105dB
500 kHz -60dB
1000 kHz -35dB
1600 kHz -15dB
2300 kHz -3dB

These figures are normalized to the passband response of -15dB, which is due to the impedance mismatch between the source and load and would have been there without the filter. Hence, the filter works almost as well in spite of the mismatch, which is good news to those who use long-wire antennas.

Subject: Construction of filters for SW reception

Several people have asked for construction details of the filters I built for my DX-440.

The high-pass filter helped some, but in my location the VHF/UHF broadcasters are also causing problems. So, I dug out the ARRL handbook and chose a 7-element Chebyshev low-pass design that is -3 dB at 35 MHz, -20 dB at 43 MHz, and -50 dB at 64 MHz (all calculated; it works well in practice!)

LOW-PASS FILTER (Rejects FM, TV, etc.)

chassis ground

I had to do a little more improvising at this point. I used .33 uH instead of .36, and .66 uH instead of .42, but it works fine.

The 5-lug terminal strips were perfect for these circuits, since there are 4 lugs plus a grounded lug. All "ground" connections go to the lug that is mounted to the chassis, and the other 4 lugs are used for each of the connections on the signal line. One terminal strip is used per filter. Since both filters were necessary to clean up the hash, I am going to put them both into one box when I get the time.

The proper way to connect them is in series, i.e.

signal in ------- filter 1 -------- filter 2 -------- signal out

There is no difference between ends. They are "bilateral" which means you can't possibly hook them up backwards. (In the above schematics, left and right ends are interchangeable.)

COIL WINDING

You can make the coils yourself using this formula:

L = 0.2 * B^2 * N^2 / (3B + 9A + 10C)

L is the inductance, in uH
A is the length of the coil, in inches
B is the mean diameter of the coil, in inches
C is the diameter of the wire, in inches
N is the number of turns

For small wire, you can assume C = 0.

Parts for the filters can be obtained from the following source:

If you can find the address of the relay site you might just get a verification from the folks there. At least at one time that was a way around the folks at Bush House.

Either a letter from them, or you might include a prepared card they can sign. Or even better, when going that route might be to ask them if perhaps they still have a stock of cards at the relay site itself.

Funny how they have to spend millions on FAUX, flights and busing to get

No. Most ham rigs made since 1980 don't actually produce an AM signal, they produce a double sideband reduced carrier signal. Ham rigs produce a signal by taking an AM signal and running it through a filter to remove the carrier and the other sideband.

Their "AM" mode signal is made by recombining the the upper and lower sideband signals, with only a tiny residual carrier.

Most AM receivers can receive this signal, but there is no carrier to lock on to, so I doubt that a sync detector can lock onto them.

Could also be he's using a commerical rig. It's perfectly legal to use a rig designed for commerical use on the ham bands, but not the other way around.

So for example, if he were on a sailboat, where every ounce counts, he would have a commerical rig, but not a ham one.

There are also lots of millitary and commercial rigs out there being sold as surplus, maybe he bought one of them.

TenTec made one (the model 100) for the CAP (US Civil Air Patrol) which is no longer in use by them, but there are probably a handful in every CAP office storage bin waiting for someone to throw them away (or donate them to a ham).

There were also similar Yaseu rigs.

They could be modified for ham use.

Or maybe he just forgot, set his switch to the wrong position, etc. Some rigs automaticly select the sideband, some don't.

Geoff.

With only a tiny residual carrier, any AM receiver with an envelope detector would see this as a overmodulated AM signal and the reception would be quite distorted.

Hey, look everybody. A liberal stereotyping Blacks in Harlem as inherently violent people! Of course racism is common for liberals .. remember when Harry Reid said that he thought Obama had a good chance of winning because he was "light skinned" and didn't speak with a "Negro dialect" and even Obama's VP ole slow Joe Biden said, "I mean, you got the first mainstream African-American who is articulate and bright and CLEAN and a nice-looking guy"! What a bunch of racists! LOL!!

Now this is a cool idea. Thanks! If I sent them a prepared card that required only a signature (and postage, I suppose), would it normally be just an ordinary postcard? I assume that, in lieu of IRCs (which the PO no longer sells) one would need to include a couple of $$.

WRTVH usually has those relay addresses, don't they? I need me a new one...

Worth a try :-)

Free speech is often the singular Americam freedom that is most blatantly attacked. Apart from spare imposition of responsible self-restraint (slander/libel and inciting riots, etc), it should be neither restricted nor suppressed, nor physically attacked by anyone. Witness the hideous stunt the Saudis are pulling tomorrow - they are about to behead a man, the father of five little children, for having a pure entertainment TV show about fortune-telling. Some uber-religious idiot tyrant accuses him of sorcery, next thing you know he's the victim of state-sanctioned murder imposed by a church-mandated puppet trial. This must never come to pass in the civilized world, and it should be adamantly opposed anywhere it happens. Cultural mores are no excuse for this kind of oppression.

But that's exactly the situation for a synchronous detector.

An AM signal reaches your receiver, but the carrier is too weak due to selective fading. The issue is the strength of the carrier to the sidebands, if the carrier is too weak it will sound like overmodulation (which it is, just at the receiver rather than transmitter).

You can reinsert the carrier at the receiver, but with DSB of some sort, you don't know where to set it properly. It's not just the issue of single sideband where a mistuned receiver will shift the audio by a certain amount (which one can live with), but with DSB if each sideband doesn't translate down to the same audio frequency (which would happen if the BFO isn't in the right spot), then the two sidebands clash. If the incoming carrier is weak, the issue of beating against the local carrier from the BFO is a secondary issue.

A sync detector figures out where to place the missing carrier whether the carrier is weak or not, or even whether there is a carrier. It doesn't matter if the carrier was weak compared to the sidebands when the signal left the transmitter, for if the carrier was weakened along the way to your receiver.

Which brings up another issue. Everyone talks about sync detectors, but there are a variety of schemes, which do end up operating differently.

People think the sync detector is vital, yet then "some work better than others". Some of that may be due to the specific scheme used to provide the feature, while in other cases it can be due to bad implementation of a specific scheme.

The stereotype of the phase locked loop locking to the carrier of the incoming signal and then that is used as the BFO to translate the signal down to audio, that may be the least used. It's certainly similar to schemes where the carrier is simply amplified a lot in reference to the sidebands (like the scheme to use a Q-multiplier to raise the level of the incoming carrier compared to the sidebands) or a very narrow IF strip is used to isolate and amplify the incoming carrier and then fed to the product detector. They work, but if the carrier disappears, they go out of lock, and they certainly aren't as versatile as some others. (I gather the Drake R7 used a detector along these lines).

There was a whole wave of detectors for DSB in "Ham Radio" magazine in the seventies, and the next scheme up was to get the location of the missing carrier by looking at the sidebands. Double the frequency of the incoming signal, and then divide it back, and you'd get a signal right in the middle. Since the sidebands are duplicate of each other Use a town at the transmitter to make it simple, a 1KHz tone. A 10MHz DSB signal will then have an output at 9.999MHz and 10.001MHz, if you add those up you will get 10MHz, and it will remain 10MHz no matter where that tone goes. The 10MHz is exactly in the right spot to properly translate the sidebands back to audio, and that's what you want.

When Webb described the "synchronous detector" in CQ about 1958, the intent was to demodulate DSB with no carrier. (The carrier doesn't carry content, it just means you don't need a BFO at the receiver or a means to know where it should be set, but the carrier does use power, while the two sidebands provide information about where the carrier should be, and allow for some level of diversity reception by selecting one of the two sidebands.). It doesn't lock to the carrier, since no carrier was expected. It uses information from outputs of the product detectors (yes two of them) to show where to place the reinserted carrier. It works with any DSB signal, whether it has a carrier or not. It won't demodulate SSB since there is no information on where to place the BFO in reference to the sideband, you need to unlock the loop since the PLL will otherwise try to lock to what it can't find and thus not tune properly. This type of detector is very similar to the "sideband slicer" and other such products that used the phasing method of sideband reception for SSB, allowing one to select upper or lower sideband by the proper combination of phased signals, the addition being the circuitry to lock the BFO to the proper place.

I gather that's the common type of sync detector in most receivers nowadays, but I don't know for sure. One can have that sort of arrangement, that does lock to the sidebands, without fully decoding the two sidebands separately, and there seems to be receivers that don't provide for that selectible sideband.

But that's not some different technique, it's just cheaper.

it's cheaper to have a variable oscillator as the BFO than two crystals to allow for a fixed BFO that is properly placed for upper and lower sideband. Crystals cost money, the tuneable BFO is cheaper and allows for a level of fine tuning (though once you use it for fine tuning, you lose the ability to place it right where it should be on the slopes of the IF filter, but with a tuneable BFO you'd only be guessing anyway).

In both cases, there is a BFO. Some people seem confused by that, since in the old days of a tuneable BFO, the knob was labelled BFO, but once sideband receivers came along with crystal controlled BFOs, the knob was labelled "mode" or "sideband".

With a sync detector, you need a tuneable BFO anyway to lock to the incoming signal, so there's little sense in tossing that out for a crystal controlled BFO for SSB reception.
